The Gale Plow committee were in Adrian last Monday looking over the different localities offered for their new factory. The Council held a special meeting on that day and issued a call for a special election on April 2d to vote on the proposition to bond the city in the sum of $50,000, $35,000 of which will be donated to the Gale company. Adrian means business in this matter, and is taking hold of it with a will. Whether bonds can be legally issued for such a purpose, is a grave question, and whether the city will vote the bonds is another question. Still if the bonds shall be voted, the works may be secured. The Gale Company will have the fun of enjoying the cords afterwards, if they can.

FARMER'S TARIFF MEETING.

A meeting of farmers to discuss the tariff system as it effects the farmer, will be held at the Newburg school house Friday evening, March 23d. It is hoped that all interested will be present. F. V. Horton, W. B. Keyser, Jerome Bowen, Frank Rector, R. B. Leslie, O. P. Richardson, David Hicks, L. E. Taylor, M. G. Updyke, Horatio Keyser, Chas. McNeil, Chas. Keyser and A. P. Helliday, are expected to give their views. And any and all others who may be present will have an opportunity to speak on the question. This is to be a farmer's discussion, not a political one. As it is a non partizan question and effects us all alike, it must be discussed with a friendly "malice toward none, charity for all" feeling. Then the object of the meeting will be accomplished, and a better understanding of the tariff system by us all will be brought about. The meeting will be called to order at 1:30 o'clock sharp. Ladies especially invited to be present.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Come to the HERALD office for your

A few enterprising individuals had their cutters out yesterday.

There was an old fashioned beoming crowd in town last Saturday.

Frank Hall is home from the Agricultural College, for a day or two.

We have no special Sunday School lesson this week, as next Sabbath is review day.

Prof. A. W. Burnett, of Ann Arbor, is spending a few days with his parents in this village.

Fred Berger has gone to Elgin, Ill., where he expects to secure a position in the watch factory.

John J. Orr keeps fixing up his new store. The latest improvement is a fine prescription case.

The House has passed the bill authorizing the issue of fractional currency and it will probably become a law.

Miss Alice Tilden is at home for a few days visit. She is now living with her sister, Mrs. A M Henry, at Lansing.

The venerable Peter Sharp, of Ridgeway, has been spending a few days in Tecumseh with his daughter, Mrs. D. McNair.

Geo. Marsden has invoked the aid of the paper hanger, thereby greatly improving the appearance of his restaurant.

Last Saturday A. W. Slayton bought 100,000 feet of red oak of Milan Sage. This lumber will be used in the manufacture of antique furniture.

About twenty of Miss May Hyde's friends committed a surprise upon her last Friday evening. A very pleasant evening was enjoyed.

The Centennial Exposition at Cincinnati, is destined to be the grandest ever held in the West. It will open on the 4th of July and close Oct. 27th, lasting one hundred days.

Mr. and Mrs. James H. Potter were surprised by a number of their friends last Monday evening. They entertained their guests however, as though they had been a week getting ready.

John Freeman has got out a new brand of cigars "The Cricket." They will be a first class cigar, fully equal to the Aboriginal. Tansley Bros., are now turning out the first lot of boxes for the new brand.

The Kansas City News nominates Wm. E. Quimby, of the Detroit Free Press, for Vice President. The Democratic National Convention could go farther and fare worse. Cleveland and Quimby would make a strong team.

We have turned out several jobs of engraving lately. Mr. Preston's work is giving good satisfaction. Persons who are in need of engraving of any kind—either cheap process or fine wood cuts—should call and inspect our work and prices.

E. V. DePuy has our thanks for late copies of the Gage County Democrat published at Beatrice, Neb. He also sends an attractive folder setting forth the past growth and present advantages of Beatrice. It is published by authority of the Board of Trade.

In the awards for premium articles given by the Evening News, Lenawee County fairs very well. Editor Schermerhorn, of the Hudson Gazette, takes the first prize of $50, in the general class, and Geo. W. Larwill, of the Adrian Times takes the third prize in the sentimental class, amounting to $15.00.

Last Sunday afternoon Mrs. M. P. Brown celebrated President Cleveland's birthday by presenting her husband with two beautiful twin girls. Whether Mr. Brown appreciates the day chosen or not, he fully appreciates the honor. We are almost persuaded that it pays to be a prohibitionist, after all.

The Prohibitionists met last Monday evening and organized for the campaign, electing the following officers:

President—H. L. Stewart.
Vice Pres.—C. S. Williamson.
Secretary—James Moir.
Treasurer—L. P. Brown.
Executive Committee—P. W. Adams, J. H. Osborn, C. L. Albaugh.
Finance Committee—E. J. Hollister, B. F. Steinhoff, J. D. Sholes.

The club started off with nearly 70 members. Monthly meetings will be held in the K. of L. Hall, in Bidwell's block, the first one on Saturday evening, March 31st.

Card of Thanks

We wish to extend our thanks to many friends and neighbors and especially Mr. and Mrs. James Wilson for the many favors to us in the sickness and death of our beloved daughter and sister.

House-cleaning season is at hand. Don't forget that R. Morrison does paperhanging and kalsomining. Orders left at the corner of Railroad and Logan streets will receive prompt attention.

Shall Tecumseh have a canning factory?

Prohibition caucus next Monday evening.

Democratic caucus next Wednesday afternoon.

The toboggan slide was well patronized last night.

The Board of Supervisors is in session this week at Adrian.

This must be the second edition of winter, revised and enlarged.

A scheme is under way to connect Macon with Tecumseh by telephone.

The sun crossed the line yesterday, and the days will continue to lengthen.

The winter term of school will close to-morrow, and there will be a vacation of one week.

Call your caucuses early and do not wait until the eleventh hour before ordering your tickets.

Get your election tickets printed at the Herald Office. All election printing promptly and accurately done.

Chas. Lawrence has taken the position of clerk and book keeper in Temple, McClure and Co's lumber office.

The first installment of Mr. Stevenson's great story "The Outlaws of Tunstall Forest" will begin in the Detroit Tribune with its issue of March 25th.

An auction of the personal property of the late mother Jones of Raison Valley ½ mile north of the Seminary will be held next Wednesday P. M March 28th.

Mrs. N. R. Brown has been spending a few days in the city carefully selecting an assortment of the new and fancy spring millinery goods preparatory for the Easter and early trade.

Meetings are being held every night in the Cong. Church at Franklin with increasing interest. Preaching by Rev. J. P. Borton of North Adams. Next week Rev. C. T. VanAukin, state evangelist, will conduct the work.

The death of Mrs. A. Stevens, who has been suffering from nervous prostration for two weeks past, occured yesterday afternoon at one o'clock, at the age of 64 years and 5 months. The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock, at the house.

Mrs. A. Kelly and Children.

A young peoples society has been organized in the M. E. Church, and the following officers chosen.

President—Dr. Geo. Howell.
Vice Pres—Mrs. J. R Hialey.
Secretary—Hattie Montgomery.
Treasurer—Eugene Tremaine.

Their meetings will be held on the second Monday of each month.

Dr. Bennett will be at the Lilley House on Monday March 26th. You all know he does what he claims. Piles of all kinds cured without knife, ligature or pain, not an hour laid up from work. Those chronic troubles get well and remain so, 95 per cent of them, no matter what they are called, all by his new method of treatment. Hernia radically cured in one week.

Chas. Taylor, who has been clerking in Wesley's Clothing store at Adrian, for several months past, has returned home and entered Dr. Frost's office, where he will pursue a course of medical study. Charley graduated from our High School, class of '87. He was considered not only the luckiest member of the class, but also one of the best. Success to him in his new field of labor.

I shall offer twelve $90, organs at $48.00 for ten days. New Home sewing Machines $23.50 to $29.00. Twenty five cents Ludrig Richter mouth organs at 13 cents—$1.50 music books at 67 cents—$15.00 banjos at $6.00—$6.00 Mohair plush piano stools at $2.25—Remember this is one chance in a lifetime to buy goods in my line, as everything must be sold at some price. I cannot move anything as freights are so high to Jacksonville Fla. where I am soon to move.

FARMER'S UNION PICNIC.

The committee to make arrangements for the Farmer's Union Picnic met at the HERALD office last Saturday afternoon. One delegate was present from each club in Northern Lenawee, including the Macon Grange. The session lasted nearly two hours and the details of the picnic were all well discussed. A permanent organization was effected as follows.

President—I. H. Schreder.
Vice Pres.—M. J. Martin.
Secretary—W. B. Keyser.
Treasurer—A. G. Hall.
Executive Com.—One from each club, including Macon Grange, to be appointed by the clubs.
Com. on Place—W. B. Keyser and John H. Smith.
Com. on Program—W. Crittenden, E. L. Russell, J. W. Baker.
Com. on Finance—President of each club.

The date of the picnic was fixed for Saturday, June 23d, 1888. The several committees will hold an adjourned meeting at the HERALD office on Saturday, May 5th.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS.

THE BAPTIST STATE SUNDAY SCHOOL BOARD HOLD A TWO DAYS' SESSION IN TECUMSEH.

A Largely Attended and Very Interesting Meeting—Essays, Addresses and Song Services—A Brief Synopsis of the Proceedings.

The Sunday School Convention under the auspices of the Baptist State Board was held at the Baptist church in this village, according to previous announcement. The first session was held on Thursday evening the 15th, and the convention continued thro' the entire day of Friday.

E. A. Hough, Esq., of Jackson, acted as leader, and was ably assisted by Miss Bacon and the choir in the musical part of the exercises. After calling the convention to order brief devotional exercises were gone through with. Rev. Dr. William H. Stifler of Detroit, then gave the congregation an able discourse. His theme was "The Gospel and the Children." We herewith present a short synopsis thereof, which will give an idea of the salient points:

TEXT:—Mark, 10th Chap. 15th verse.

Mr. Stifler's opening remarks were to prove that the provisions of the Gospel were such that a little child could understand them. On this subject he said: It is not the Lord's will that the little ones perish; God makes no requirements to the children that they cannot fulfill. First, the provisions of the Gospel are so simple that the children cannot fail to understand them, and the provision of the Gospel is, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Now then, believing is the thing into which the child's love is first introduced. That this little boy is his brother; that the woman to whom he looks in the family is his mother; and the man to whom he looks is his father. Now the child believes this without understanding the reason. Just so in the religion of Jesus Christ. When the child has learned to believe this, a feeling of love springs up in the little one because of the religion it believes to exist there. There also comes a spirit of obedience. I pity the house where the child is not obedient. I once took a strange census of the prisoners of a certain institution. I asked each of them personally what was the first step that led them there. And they answered their first punishment was for disobedience in the home. I do not say that a child can understand what theology means. Nor can they understand its principals, but must the child have bread, kept from its mouth until it can understand how it is made. There is a simple story based upon the principle of that provision as to God himself. It is that there was born in the city of Bethelem a child. He had birth days just as any child. He grew to boyhood and from boyhood to manhood. He was tried and executed on the cross; the grave received him as it would receive anyone; as it had received hundreds before and millions since, and on the third day he arose and now sitteth on the right hand of his father in Heaven. It is a simple story, and the child will love it, and the child will read and cherish it because of its love for him.

The Sunday School books sometimes make us believe that the good children all die and the bad ones all live. I once called upon a lady who had a disobedient child. The mother took it very coolly and when questioned as to its behavior, she said she was rather glad to see her child so disorderly, because she once had a child that was very quiet and good and one day it died. She was glad to see this one disorderly because she was hoping it would not die. Would it not be better that the child should die early than live long and never know the love of Jesus. A child is not ashamed to tell that he loves the Lord. When you have found the loves of Jesus Christ then you have real God's message. It is the message of God to everyone of us. He who shall not receive the kingdom of God as a child, shall not enter therein.

After a short conference meeting the convention adjourned.

FRIDAY MORNING.

The meeting opened with devotional exercises, after which Bro. Whitney of Adrian was appointed secretary. On motion a question box was established to be opened at the close of the session.

The question—Benevolence in the Old Testament Dispensation—was to have been discussed by Rev. J. Butterfield of Grand Rapids, but being absent, Rev. E. D. Rundell, State Missionary of New Buffalo, responded by asking pertinent questions about the giving of tithes during the Old Testament period.

Rev. E. W. White of Jackson, discussed the same subject under the three heads of Benevolence, Requirement and Distribution.

D. A. Waterman, of Detroit was not present and the subject to which he was to respond to—Benevolence in the New Testament Dispensation—was responded to by Chas. Rhodes, State Missionary of Ohio. He said there was no plan of missions unfolded in the old testament, there was no demand for it as there is in the new. In the beginning the Jews had one religious beneficence. Under the new dispensation we have church, educational, the poor and other expenses. The plan laid down in the word of God is to set aside a sum every week according as God has prospered you, for the church. I believe, keeping these things in view, that we have a right to adopt any plan that we see fit.

Bro. White, of Jackson, thought that as we pay our insurance by the week, pay house rent by the week, we should pay for God by the week.

Five minutes' addresses were then indulged in on the subject by, Charles Whitney, Adrian; Brother White of Jackson, and Bro. Quick, Weston, and C. H. Bramble, Tecumseh.

Dr. L. G. North delivered a short address on the uses and abuses of S. S. Helps. Thought that the papers in some teachers' hands was of no help to the pupils. Teachers did not study them enough. They waited until the last part of the week before looking at the Quarterly, read it over in a hurried manner and the lesson was learned.

Bro. Rhodes gave some friendly advice to superintendents of Sunday schools. There are certain duties that fall to the superintendent; of course he must study his lesson. If he is not a student of the Bible he is not fit to be one. He must study for others. I could not review a Sunday School unless I had prepared for it. It may be his duty to conduct teacher's meeting. It is the duty of the one who can do it best in some cases.

The question box was then opened and some important questions about S. S. work were answered by the moderator, E. A. Hough, of Jackson, in a satisfactory manner, after which the meeting adjourned to the dining room where all were invited to refresh themselves.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

The general subject for the afternoon meeting was, "Teachers and Teaching." Rev. E. W. White was the first speaker and his part was, Higher conceptions of the teacher's work. Mr. White is a very pleasant speaker and read an able paper on that subject. He said: Jesus Christ is our model that teaches us the highest conception. He is spoken of as being a prophet, priest and afterwards a king. The Sunday school teacher in order to be successful must be preceded by a gift of God for that special work. There are three aspects of this redemptive work of Jesus Christ. First, example; second, sacrifice; and third, his word. We remember the example. If we do the work it is not with this idea that Jesus came into Christianity. We can imitate Jesus as an original authority. Jesus Christ spoke as no man spoke. He said, I am the truth. There are some exceedingly good men and women that cannot be good teachers though they try again and again. There are some things in their lives which they have not submitted to the Almighty God. Let the spirit do its work and the teaching will follow. You have no business of moulding these lives without you have a special call of God to do it. You are not to wait for any wonderful or marvelous working of God but try and fit yourself.

Rev. I. S. Holmes, of Adrian, was not present, and "Better Methods of Preparation" was taken up and explained by E. A. Hough in a few brief words. He believed God had called him to Jackson to teach. Prepare to teach as a work. Some say they have not got time to prepare to teach. It is our duty to prepare. First, read over the lesson carefully, verse by verse. Fix upon some central thought that you are going to have to put before the mind of your scholars. Next, I take my Bible and read the references bearing upon the lesson, and then follow it with faithful prayer. I read over the helps carefully during the week but never take them into the school.

Bros. Rundell, Rhodes and Webb also gave their experience on the subject after which C. B. Finch presented an illustration of a very unique character, showing the trials and tribulations that a Sunday School Superintendent has.

In the absence of Jasper B. Gates of Detroit, Geo. Bennett of Adrian gave a five minute talk on "How to Keep the Young Men," followed by Bro. Webb, on the same subject. They thought the excellent way to keep the young men in the Sunday School was to put them in the class with the young ladies.

FRIDAY EVENING.

The evening session proved to be the largest one of the convention.

Bro. Gates having arrived, he opened the meeting with his address on how to Keep the Young Men in the School. He thought it was of prime importance to keep them in the Sunday School. The first thing is to have a good teacher, one who is interested in young men. They should have a room apart from the regular school. Treat him as a young man, and don't forget to thank him when he has done you a favor.

The general subject of the evening was "The Big Baptist Engine," divided into four parts. The first being the engine itself. Bro. Rundell gave a brief description of it in an interesting manner. He told the audience not to take him for the engine. You have wondered in reading this topic what it was about. [illegible] the upper peninsula, I visited what is known as the Calumet copper mine; while there I saw cables running in all directions. I saw cars moving without visible means over the tracks. I came to the pit in the hole in the ground and saw cars going out and up. I said where does all this power come from. He took me in a building larger than this church and there I saw a immense engine the like of which is not on the American Continent being 4750 horse power. To that we might compare the great Baptist Publication Society. A society that is reaching all over the land, a society that is getting down into the Sunday school and into all schools in the United States; enabling them to sit in their study, and taking the word of God, prepare the Sunday School lesson for the next Sunday and place it in the hands of 50,000 teachers. The plant is in Philadelphia.

"The Builders and Operators" were explained by Bro. Rhodes. The foundation of it was made in the year 1841, in the city of Washington, when the organization was effected and called the Baptist Religious Tract Society, with the following officers: Pres.—Obadiah B. Brown; Agent, George Wood; Treas. Luther Price; Chairman of Board of Managers, Dr. Stoughton. It was run in that city as a tract society for 16 years.

In 1840 it was changed to its present name. For 48 years it has been growing until it has indeed become a very great engine. In 1850 it had no capital and $10,000 was then raised and handed over to the publication department to use, and has since been paying interest. The president of the concern is now Wm. Bucknell, and Dr. Griffith, Sec, with a board of managers.

Bro. Whitney made a few remarks on "The Fuel" used in this engine, and its "Product and Distribution" was interestingly described by Rev. Z. Grennell, of Detroit. The convention then closed with devotional exercises.

A SAD ACCIDENT.

Last Sunday afternoon, Clarence the twelve year old son of Daniel T. Hall, met with an accident that caused his death. Mr. and Mrs. Hall went to the neighbors for a brief call, leaving Fred, with two younger brothers at home. During the parent's absence the children found a pistol and began playing with it, supposing it to be unloaded. Clarence pointed the weapon towards his head and the loaded barrel discharged, inflicting a fatal wound, from which he died within half an hour, and before his father and mother arrived home. Mr. Hall had carefully concealed the weapon where he thought there was not the least danger of the children finding it. The funeral services were largely attended yesterday afternoon at the Baptist church. Clare was a bright, cheerful dutiful boy, and the peculiar and awful manner of his death is a crushing blow to his parents. No blame can be attached to any one. It was one of those mysterious accidents that human eye can neither foresee, nor provide against. The bereaved family have the sympathy of our entire community in their great affliction.

SEED OATS.

It will pay you to buy the Early Swedish Oats for seed, as they yield the most and stand up the best of any. Read what J. W. Baker says about them and call and see the oats.
C. A. SLAYTON.

TECUMSEH, Mich., Mar. 7, 1888.
C. A. SLAYTON,—DEAR SIR:—The Early Swedish Oats I got from you last spring and sowed have proved all you claimed. I sowed the New Welcome and White Russian oats also, giving each one a good chance, and the Early Swedish yielded twenty, 20, bushels per acre more than either. The straw is very stiff and they stand up better than any other variety I ever raised. I am well pleased with them and will sow all of the Early Swedish this year. Yours truly,
J. W. BAKER.

OLIVER ORTON'S LETTER.

EL PASO, March 17th, 1888.

Tourists who visit Mexico with the expectation of finding luxuries will soon see their mistake; salt meat and poor bread being the chief article of diet. The El Paso waiting room is dirty beyond description, filled with people of both sexes, children and dogs, while they lounge about smoking, drinking playing cards, etc. El Paso is somewhat lively, and has been growing rapidly. Several railways center here and many health and pleasure seekers are to be met. The weather is uniform, and uniformly warm; the hotels modern in construction. A considerable number of adobe huts are still in existence, but have been mostly torn away, and modern houses erected in their places. The most imposing structure is the Court House and Jail, which would do credit to a much larger city. There are some small garden parks, containing flowers and tropical plants. The inhabitants are those who have come mainly for their health, and having the driving hours considerable style may be seen on the streets. El Paso del Norte, the Mexican town, is directly opposite El Paso, the American settlement, the Rio Grande running between the two. The contrast between these two towns is striking in the extreme. El Paso del Norte, like Havana, seems two or three hundred years back of El Paso, across the river. On the American side they raise the most delicious grapes from which wine is pressed equal to any in this or any other country. A special attraction to be visited by every one, passing through El Paso del Norte is an old stone church, about nine hundred years old, low, dark and filled with antique paintings and images. The inhabitants of this old town look with contempt on civilization, and the priests preach against free schools and exhort the poor ignorant Spaniards to beware of Americans and to follow the customs of their grandfathers. They are very obedient, and keep on praying, smoking cigarettes, eating beans, and wondering why the Americans can not learn some sense and enjoy life. The bull fights to be seen in this old Spanish town are probably the most inhuman in all Mexico. They saw off the horns of the bull, so he can make but little defense, worry him until sinking from pain, he is literally butchered. The town is never free from small pox and the priests denounce vaccination. A long one-story adobe building, quite close to the main plaza, is a real Mexican prison. It contains no cells, but some rooms, and a sort of court where the prisoners are allowed to congregate, talk with each other and the guard, play cards, smoke cigarettes etc. The keepers of this prison are very irregular in feeding the prisoners, sometimes a whole day passing without giving them anything. In case of disobedience of sufficient importance in the minds of the keepers, they cause the prisoner to stand upon a line in the back yard, put out a blank reporting that he was shot while trying to escape. A small restaurant on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande is run by a Parisian, and the food he offers travellers is far more toothsome than that of a big bag of Mexicans. The weather is simply perfect, and from anything I might one can live out of doors. Going further south one is surrounded with groves of cacti. As the trains arrive at the stations, natives rush up, gaze on travellers, and watch the receding cars as though they had never seen one before, and never expected to see another. At the large towns armed horsemen are out to the trains when they come in, to guard the [illegible] lest any disturbance should be started at the depot. Peddlers and beggars mainly make up the crowds at the stations, who have for sale eggs, milk, fruit and some foods peculiar to Mexico. The Indians seem cleanly, they washing their clothes in the gutters along the railroad tract. Some of their homes are simple holes in the ground covered with a little straw. They seldom lie down, but sleep sitting up like a tailor. The sand spouts are terrific on the plains; when a man sees one coming he shoots into it and it immediately fails, so say the natives, but I can't vouch for it.

DIDN'T LIKE THE PERFUME.

A Lover's Aspirations Knocked Out by a Chunk of Asafœtida.

George Waring and Arthur Clavering, two clerks in a down town Chicago store, are rivals for the hand and heart of a girl who lives on Indiana avenue, says a Chicago paper. Coming to Chicago together from the same country town, boarding at the same house, and working for the same employer, their friendship was regarded as a lasting one. The object of the affection poured out by the young men has treated both impartially, receiving Waring Monday and Saturday evenings and Clavering Sunday and Wednesday. Last Wednesday Clavering escorted the young lady—her first name is Clara—to the theater. The play and the petit souper afterward softened Miss Clara's heart so that she treated the young man with more than usual kindness. When Clavering left his room the next morning it was with the firm determination of testing his fate that same night by proposing to Clara. Waring noticed his changed demeanor and became suspicious. He believed in the doctrine of "first come first served" and was afraid that his fellow clerk's proposal would be accepted. After deep and careful study, however, he devised a scheme to prevent any such catastrophe.

"Gimme something that smells bad," said he to a druggist of his acquaintance. "I want to play a joke on a friend of mine."

The druggist smiled and handed Waring half an an ounce of asafœtida.

At 8 o'clock that evening Clavering walked jauntily up Indiana avenue whistling merrily. As he arrived in front of the house where Miss Clara lived he met Waring.

"Hello, Arthur," said the latter, "going to call on Clara, eh? Well, I thought of going in myself, but as you got here first I won't go in. Gimme a cigaret e and I'll go back down town."

Clavering passed his friend a package of "dude's delights." Waring fumbled with the package a few minutes and when he gave it back it contained half an ounce of asafœtida in addition to the tobacco.

The lover, unconscious of the plot, ran jaunTily up the steps, rang the bell, and was ushered into the parlor, where Miss Clara was coyly ensconced in an easy chair. As he entered the room he detected a peculiar odor, not ascribed it to the choice contribanon which a south wind sends from Bridgeport.

"Miss Clara," said he, plunging at once into the matter nearest his heart, "you must know my feelings toward you. I—"

Miss Clara moved her chair away and put her handkerchief in her face.

Arthur thought the first effort was rather fetching itself, but was too much in earnest to allow his thoughts to dwell upon such an unromantic thing as a stockyards odor.

"Dearest, don't cry," he continued. "Clara, I love you. Let me wipe away your tears."

Clavering nervously drew his handkerchief from his pocket. With it came the cigarettes and asafœtida which waffed down an open register. The stench was terrible.

Five minutes later the unsuccessful wooer walked slowly down Indiana avenue in deep meditation.

An hour later Waring was minus a tooth and was unable to see out of his left eye. In all probability he would have been minus more teeth and the sight in his other eye had it not been for the interference of an officer.

"I got even with him," said Clavering to Justice Lyon in the armory police court yesterday morning, after explaining the circumstances which led up to the assault, "and I am willing to pay for it."

"I admit that you had great provocation," remarked the justice, "but I'll bind you both to keep the peace in $200 bonds."

Rosa Bonheur as She Is.

That Rosa Bonheur dresses in male attire has often been commented upon by her biographers. The journal ordinarily obtains that it is her usual costume. But if you should meet her in the streets of Paris you would see a large elderly lady, rather plainly dressed in black, her gray hair tucked under a close bonnet, and unless you were attracted by the peculiar strength of her face and by her piercing, attentive eyes, you would not notice that she differed from any lady in the passing crowd, except that she wears the red ribbon of the Legion of Honneur. But Rosa Bonheur at work in her home does wear male costume. Years ago, when she was a young woman and a student, she adopted it, because it gave her more freedom in her studies at the menageries and cattle yards. Dressed as a boy, she attracted less comment and attention from the hangers-on of the stables than if she had gone among them in petticoats. Rosa Bonheur appreciates the good qualities of the blouse and at work now she sticks to this easy garment, having added to it the comfortable men's trousers which make her feet appear as all and also a wide [illegible] to show her [illegible] In this dress she appears [illegible] lower stature than it is, [illegible] and has a [illegible] manly [illegible] nag.

EAU MIGH!

With corns on her little pink toeaux,
They gave her such pain
The tears ran like rain
Down the bridge of her delicate nasaux.

Her lover—a youth frit, Cologne,—
Fled wildly and left her alogne,
When he found that her feet
With corns were replete,
With never a word he had flogne.

They sent for a doctor from Lynn,
As shrinking and neat as a pynn,
He looked at her toeaux,
The source of her woeaux,
And indulged in a gratified grynn.

He prescribed for this maid from Bordeaux
And cured all her little pink toeaux;
And now, it is said,
They, too, will be waid,
And from sorrow a grief find repeaux.

The sweet-scented youth from Cologne,
Who left her severely alogne,
When he first heard the news
His mind he did lews,
And jumped from life with a grogne.

DARING AND SUFFERING.

A History of the Andrews Railroad Raid Into Georgia in 1862.

The Most Heroic and Tragic Episode of the Civil War.

Embracing a Full and Accurate Account of the Secret Journey to the Heart of the Confederacy, the Capture of a Railway Train in a Confederate Camp, the Terrible Chase That Followed, and the Subsequent Fortunes of the Leader and His Party.

The expedition, in the daring of its inception, had the wildness of a romance; while in its gigantic and overwhelming results it sought and was likely to obtain it was absolutely sublime.—JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL HOLT'S OFFICIAL REPORT.

It was all the deepest laid scheme, and on the grandest scale, that ever emanated from the brains of any number of Yankees combined.—THE SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY (ATLANTA, GA.), APRIL 15, 1862.

Despite its tragic termination, it shows what a handful of determined men could undertake in America.—COUNT OF PARIS' HISTORY OF THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA, VOL. 2, P. 187.

By WILLIAM PITTENGER,
A MEMBER OF THE EXPEDITION.

The account of the escape and recapture of Andrews was published in The Cincinnati Commercial, about the 10th of June, and reached the sister of Miss Layton, with whom that lady then made her home. As she was already in deep distress because of Andrews' long delay without any message, they did not dare to tell her the perilous situation in which her lover was placed. But near the end of June the full account of his execution was copied in the same paper from The Southern Confederacy of June 8, 1862. As the end of all her hopes had come less than a week before the intended wedding day, her brother and sister judged it best not to keep her longer in suspense, and the paper was handed to her. Her eyes rested on the following paragraphs:

Yesterday evening a train brought from Chattanooga to this place to be executed Andrews, the leader of the engine thieves under sentence of death convicted by court martial of being a spy. He was carried out Peachtree street road, accompanied by three clergymen, and escorted by a guard. A considerable crowd followed to witness the execution.

He was a native of Hancock county, Va., born in 1829, brought up a pious Presbyterian, but has of late been living in southwestern Missouri. A good portion of his life had been spent in Flemingsburg, Ky. He had no family, but was engaged to be married during the present month.

She did not shriek or cry out, but read it through to the end, and went silently to her room, from which she did not emerge for hours, and when she did rejoin the family her face was drawn and pale, and the light had gone out of her eyes. From this time forward she took little interest in anything until the letter to Mr. McGavic, printed above, arrived. Many months after, the empty trunk, so pathetic an emblem of her blasted hopes and the great tragedy that had fallen on her life, was recovered. In the absence of any explanation, for the letter to her was never received, it seemed like a cruel mockery. Not long after she died, thus rejoining the man she had loved so faithfully through such hopeless sorrow. No brave man pities her, save that some tender woman's heart has not crushed!

A MARTYR.

We [illegible] were carried [illegible] to Chattanooga, [illegible] learned [illegible] this [illegible] which they expected [illegible] Andrews [illegible] was [illegible] Knoxville [illegible] Andrews [illegible] Confederacy [illegible] Andrews [illegible] Atlanta [illegible] Federal prisoners at the [illegible] were about to die in his [illegible] Scott called on Rev. George D. MacDonell and asked him to go along. At the jail they were taken into the room where our comrades were. Scott says:

"They [illegible] me at once as a body of condemned [illegible] young men. I could not believe also their cheerfulness under such painful circumstances. He told them that he was the bearer of the welcome tidings. This arrested their attention, but they were still unprepared for the blow that followed. They [illegible] with the severity which was the last kindness, with a few questions answered, gave the full truth to every one facing the grave and side by side [illegible] that they had been found guilty at Knoxville—of [illegible] that they were to be [illegible] by hanging, and at once. Their natural and [illegible] protests were classic as everything with which the [illegible] had anything to do, they [illegible]. Business was brought up, [illegible] and the hour was set [illegible]. Anxiety and even horror [illegible] depicted on every countenance. When they asked how soon [illegible] be answered, 'In less than two hours.' This was probably a merciful overestimate. The hearts of the preachers, upon whom had been rolled the heartbreaking task of first communicating the terrible intelligence, were very heavy. Scott spoke [illegible] 'They were talking men, who would have stood unshaken on the monument dently breach. They were picked men, chosen for their soldiery qualities; yet in a moment every cheek blanched to the lily's whiteness. In another moment, however, they rallied and appeared firm and unflinching." Scott and MacDonell then gave them such counsel as the dying need, recited to them appropriate Scripture passages, and prayed with them.

What followed is so extraordinary that it is fully given in Mr. Scott's own language:

"The next day another was taken. I have never doubted that the enemy's intention was to go through the whole list in the same way, and we were not at all solicitous as to who should come first or last. But that did prove to be of tremendous importance; for a vigorous advance of the Federal armies upon both Knoxville and Chattanooga caused Gen. Smith to give up East Tennessee for lost, and to dissolve the court and send us all in hot haste to Atlanta, Ga. Seven had then been tried. A delay of five days in this advance would have finished the whole twelve—including the writer—at the rate they were proceeding. But the whole twelve were sent away together, having seen or heard nothing to show a difference in the position of the five and the seven, and arriving in Atlanta just a week after the execution of Andrews. We had heard of that terrible event in Knoxville; but, while our sorrow was deep and poignant, our hopefulness either for the seven who had been tried or the five whose trial had been interrupted was not diminished, for Confederates had always been saying to us that his case was much more aggravated than ours.

"In Atlanta we were placed in the upper room of a large brick building, surrounded by guards. The remainder of the party who were with Andrews were placed in another room of the same building, which was the city jail. Two great events of the most opposite character, upon which turned the fate of our band, are associated closely with this jail. They will now be narrated.

CHAPTER XXIX.

A DAY OF BLOOD.

The 18th of June was a bright summer day. Our party in the jail were making merry with games and songs, utterly unsuspicious of immediate injury. But one of our number, looking out of the window, saw a squadron of cavalry approaching and called attention to it. There was nothing unusual about this, for we often noticed bands of troops on the streets; but they now halted at our gate and surrounded our prison. This was unusual and startling.

The doors down stairs opened. We heard the shuffle of feet in the hall and the clink of officers' sabers as they ascended the stairway. We held our breath in painful attention, while they paused at our door, unlocked and threw it open, and then one of the number, stepping before the others, read the names of the seven tried at Knoxville. They were ordered to respond and stand in a line before him, which they did. Robinson was sick with fever, but a guard assisted him to rise, and he stood with the rest. Then they were all told to follow over into the opposite room, while the Tennesseeans there were brought in return to us.

With throbbing hearts we asked one another the meaning of these strange proceedings. Some supposed our comrades were about to receive their acquittal; others, still more sanguine, that they would be paroled, preparatory to an exchange. But we had no confidence in these suggestions even while we made them. It would not have been necessary to surround the prison for such purposes; and the faces of the officers who had entered our room were solemn and stern.

I was sick, too, having suffered a good deal recently with malarial fever, but rose to my feet oppressed with unutterable fear—the most deadly I ever remember feeling. A half witted fellow who had been put in with the Tennesseeans came to me and wanted to play a game of cards! I had been fond of the game, but never played it after this day. Now I struck the greasy pack from his hand and bade him leave me.

From over the way we heard the sound of voices, muffled and indistinct because of the two iron doors between; then the opening and shutting of doors, the passage of several persons up and down the stairway, and last the sound as of solemn reading.

A little while after—I cannot judge of the length of time spent in such fearful agony—the ministers in the other room think it must have been more than an hour—the door opened and our comrades came back, one by one, but the change in them was fearful. My own friend, George D. Wilson, was leading, his step firm, his form erect, but his hands firmly tied, and his face pale as death. "What is it?" some one asked in a whisper for his appearance silenced every one.

"We are to be executed immediately," was the appalling reply, given in a low tone, but with thrilling distinctness. The others followed him into the room, all tied ready for the scaffold. The officers were standing in the door and barely granted them the privilege of taking us once more by the hand before death. Then came the farewells, hopeless in this world. It was a moment that seemed an age of [illegible] sorrow, heart [illegible] sorrow. What [illegible] passed in the cell [illegible] while we [illegible] standing. The [illegible] case of the [illegible] will make that plain.

Rev. [illegible] was engaged [illegible] Atlanta [illegible] Federal prisoners at the [illegible] who were about to die in his [illegible] Scott called on Rev. George D. MacDonell and asked him to go along. At the jail they were taken into the room where our comrades were. Scott says:

The entertainment given at Cottage Hall last week, was a grand success all around and the program was successfully carried out. Four new members were enrolled and two honorary members were added to their list. The society realized $13.00 for their labor.

The Democrats will hold their caucus at Exelby's Hall, at Britton, on Saturday afternoon next.

B. B. Morley, of Pratt city, Kansas, is among old friends at present. He is here in the interest of an excursion which is being worked from the Eastern states, to Pratt city and Pratt county. Several excursions will be given during the fore part of the season, beginning April 2d., for one fare for the round trip. Full particulars can be had by calling on Mr. Morley or addressing J. S Barnes, of Pratt City, Kansas. Burt reports everything flourishing in Kansas, and real estate rapidly increasing in value, with the prospect of a big boom there this season.

Our citizens were more or less surprised on Wednesday morning to learn that during the night, the feed mill, on East street, owned by Beevers & Nichols, had burned down with all the contents. The alarm of fire was given shortly after 12 o'clock, by Mrs. John Lucas, but the fire had got beyond control, so that but little stir was made, and only eight persons were at the scene of distruction. The building, grinder, sheller and fixtures, besides a kit of carpenter's tools, etc., were owned by Mr. Beevers and valued at $500, on which was an insurance of $360. The engine and fixtures were owned by Mr. Nichols, and valued at $800, with an insurance of $500. The mill has done a flourishing business during the past winter, giving general satisfaction. The origin of the fire is unknown, as they had pulled out the fire and blown off the engine when they quit work the night before.

The Prohibitionists held their caucus on Tuesday and placed in nomination the following ticket.

Supervisor—C. A. Kuffin.
Clerk—G. P. Waring.
Treasurer—C. A. Pocklington.
Justice—Geo Gripton.
Highway Com.—G. L. Oliver.
Drain Com.—N. H. Ackley.
Inspector—Dr D. W. Loree.
Constables—Jas. M. Smith, E. M. Lewis, J. R. Pocklington, Frank Smith.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

The Masonic quarters are undergoing a thorough renovation and some artistic work is being done by Merrick of Adrian.

Rev. G. E. Peters is holding daily services this week in St. John's Episcopal church. Saturday at 4 P. M. Easter evening services, with baptisms. Sunday at 10:30 A. M., sermon and holy communion. Children's service at 3:30 P. M., and evening service at 7 o'clock. The choir will render some choice Easter music.

At the M. E. church Sunday morning there will be Children's service in place of the regular service.

Keyes & Kishpaugh received a fine mottled Java cockerell Wednesday from J. Y. Becknell of Buffalo, N. Y.

Mrs. Geo. A. Kies of Elkhart, Ind., is visiting her friends here.

Fred Field spent Sunday at J. S. Kies, with his family. Mrs. Field, who has been quite ill, is much better.

Monday being election day, the caucuses will be held Friday. The Democratic at 2 P. M., and the Republican at 7:30 P. M.

Lillie Avery of Adrian, visited at Chauncey Fuller's this week.

Mrs. Mina Muir Parker is in Detroit this week.

Elias Chase of Detroit, was at his brother Henry's over Sunday.

A. C. Huntington visited Jonesville one day last week.

A. W. Stalker was in Saline Monday and Tuesday.

Rha Conkling of Manchester, was in our streets Monday.

Ansel Belding of Danville, Ill., has been spending the week with his brother George.

Wm. A. Millspaugh, who has been quite indisposed, is able to be out some.

Mrs. Joseph Stitt, of Evans Lake, who has been so very low for months, passed away last week, and the funeral was held last Friday.

Mrs. Bruce and Augusta leave this week for Perrysburg, Ohio, where they will make an extended visit.

Miss Mary Bruce is again in Kansas where she will remain during the summer occupying her claim.

Mrs. John T. Clark has been spending the week with her mother and friends at Blissfield and expects to return Friday, when she will complete her visit here.

C. E. Corwin returned home from Grass Lake, Friday last.

Minnie Jacobs left Saturday morning for a visit with her sister Libbie at Claireview.

Dwight Hause came over from Detroit to attend the entertainment Friday night and remained over Sunday.

E. R. Smith returned the last of the week from Rochester, N. Y.

J. T. Clark came over from Grosse Point and spent Sunday with his family. He returned Tuesday.

Lou McDermott passed Sunday with her people.

Miss Dora Randall of Mason, visited Mr. and Mrs. Del Ordiway this week.

Ben C. Ellis left Monday for Carson City, where he will open a boot and shoe store. We dislike to lose Ben from our midst, and will miss him sadly, yet we wish him success in his new home, and know that he will make many friends there.

Newcomb Brown of Jackson, was in town Monday and Tuesday. His friends were very glad to see him in such good health again.

Miss Mabel Guiwitz, so well and favorably known by all our citizens, died Tuesday night at the residence of John Fisher, of gastric fever. Although it was known she was sick no one supposed her dangerously so, and the news of her death was a great shock to all. Her funeral will be held at the residence of Jno. Fisher, Friday afternoon at 1 o'clock, and her body laid by the side of her parents in our beautiful cemetery.

The remains of Truman Farr were brought here Tuesday and placed in the vault. Mr. Farr formerly lived in this vicinity and was known well by all of our older people. He lived to a ripe age, being 82 years old.

Hubbill Middlebrook, father of August, died very suddenly Saturday morning of neuralgia of the heart, in his 73d. year. His funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at the Baptist church, and was attended by a large quintet of sympathizing friends. Mr. Middlebrook served his country faithfully during the late war, and though quite enfeebled in consequence of his army life, he was able to be around, and was uptown Friday afternoon. Saturday moring while dressing, he was taken with what he thought colic, but proved to be neuralgia, and going to his heart killed him instantly.

The entertainment given for the Congregational society last Friday night, at Town Hall, was a most enjoyable one. There was a large and appreciative audience, and all who took part acquitted themselves with great credit. The quartettes were nicely rendered. Mrs. Genevieve Burroughs' recitation was most effectively given, and the selection one that touched all hearts. Miss Henderson's solo was well received. Miss Smith of Franklin, brought down the house by her whistling. The selections by the Franklin Glee Club were very happy ones and brought forth hearty encores, as did the duetts by Mr. Crittenden and Miss Alexander. The instrumental duet by the Ladies Quartette furnished some fine music. Mrs. John T. Clark and Miss Laura Clark gained new laurels by their artisticly rendered solos, and Oceola Sinclair and Mrs. Ella Clark are to be complimented for their character impersonations in "Elder Sniffle's Courtship." Miss Nellie Martin proved herself almost a professional by the way she sustained an old lady's character. In fact, it was a success from first to last. Wish we might have more entertainments of a similar character.

Whether the persons who generally cause such disturbance at the Hall were absent or our criticisms of a recent date had the desired effect, we know not, but certainly no one could censure any one on this occasion, for the best of order was maintained throughout the entire evening.

ONSTED ODDS.

When spring time comes, gentle Ann.

It was 4° below zero here on the 23d. inst.

The Sunday schools were reorganized last Sunday and about the same officers were re-elected.

Will Simmons has been quite sick along back.

Miss Florence Secor has been somewhat indisposed for a few days.

Fred Glenn has not gone to the old sod yet as was the talk.

A little child of Wilmer Knapp is quite sick at present.

Sleighs were in use to some extent during the last little winter.

The proprietor of the paper mill at Battle Creek has an agent here, also a baling machine, and is buying all the straw that he can get and shipping to the mill after baling.

O. L. Short will erect a house on his property just south of the school house, this Spring.

The Republican Caucus will be held here on the 30th, and the Democrats will hold theirs on the 29th, at Springville, and a good turnout at both meetings is desired.

The ladies missionary society will hold their annual meeting here on March the 39th.

The Free Will society will hold their annual meeting on Saturday, March 31st., and a trustee is to be elected and such other business as comes before the meeting.

The sugar supper at the North Rome church on Thursday evening of last week was quite largely attended and a good time was the result.

The town meeting will be held in this place this year, and there will be a game of base ball played between the Onsted and Springville second nines if the weather and grounds permit.

Mrs. Julia Reed's Sabbath school class will hold an apple and popcorn social at the church on Friday evening of this week—bill 5cts.

The church is being decorated with paper and when finished will look very attractive.

Last Friday Pete Russell and his pet crow were on the street and attracted the attention of a number of pedestrians.

A large quantity of butter and eggs are coming into market at present.

The sugar social at Fraternity Hall, last Friday evening under the auspices of the senior bible class, was a success both socially and financially. A very enjoyable time was had and $15 was received.

The new millinery department that has lately been added to the business of the village, seems to thrive right along.

Miss Sylvia Maxwell will teach in district No. 3, North Rome this spring. She has taught heretofore in the same place and gave very good satisfaction.

NORTH EAST FRANKLIN.

Mike Cummins' wife and child have been visiting relatives in Franklin.

Mrs. Ida Spencer of Raisin, visited at her parents last week. Mr. Spencer came out Saturday and both returned to their home on Sunday.

R. Taylor and family are anticipating the pleasure of a visit from Mrs. Mary Wood, of Hillsdale, this week.

Davidson Burroughs had the misfortune to get tipped over Friday, breaking his buggy quite badly.

Andrew Marshall is making preparations to move on his farm lately purchased of Patrick Cummins.

Wesley Pawson will move in a few days into the Lamkin house, now occupied by Joseph Wilson, while Mr. W. will take up his abode on one of Ben. Rywold's farms.

MACON MUSIC.

Our winter term of school closed on Friday last.

The Macon normal students are home on a short vacation.

Mrs. Alice Winchell and daughter of Leslie are visiting friends here.

Hebron Camburn, who recently purchased the Wilkins farm, has rented it to Mr. Knight of Franklin.

The funeral services of Dr. Joseph Howell were held at the residence of his son Edwin Howell on Tuesday last, conducted by Rev. Potter of Tecumseh.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

School opened Monday with Flora Chase, of Tecumseh, to wield the rod to the unruly.

P. M. Lossing shipped a carload of hogs from this station last Tuesday.

John Campbell, we are sorry to say, looks as though he had a hot potato in his mouth and couldn't swallow it. It's nothing but the tooth ache that causes it.

Mrs. I. B. Weeks and children returned to their home at Hanover last Saturday, after a two days' visit with her sister, Mrs. Dr. Begel.

Geo. Hoxsie, at the present writing, has not returned from Tennessee, but is expected at any minute.

Our usually quiet town is at present under a state of some excitement. The trouble seems to be over the piece of land near here known as "The Mill Property." We understand Bert Holdridge and Dexter Still have peaceable possession of the same at present.

Dr. Begel made a business trip to Detroit last Saturday.

A. D. Macham and family made a pleasant trip to Romulus last Saturday. They visited at R. Raymond's.

Wan Holdridge murdered Bill Cox's old black horse one day last week. If we are not greatly mistaken such treatment is a disgrace to the "horse race."

Jim Gordon has taken up his abode with L. Lowe, near Britton. We advise the people in that vicinity to be a little careful how they "sass" Jim, as he is one of the kids who run the teacher out.

EDITOR HERALD:—As it is our custom to examine the columns of the HERALD, as soon as possible after its arrival in our rural burg, we noticed last week, the question you gave to its readers, "Who is Oliver Orton? Does anybody know?" We give it up, ride a way. But after viewing the columns more thoroughly, noticed a letter from "Oliver Orton." We had not read much of such a characteristic letter, before we were almost sure we could guess who "Oliver Orton" is. We will say, he is the kindest hearted man and worthy of as much confidence, honor and praise, as any gentleman that ever visited our little hamlet. He don't live in Chicago, nor is he Blaine's boss backer. He is christened down at Britton, "The Brooklyn Bush-whacker. Are we right?

RENRA.

Ridgeway, March 26th, '88.

WHAT IS IT? AND WHAT IT IS.

Papillon (Clarke's extract of flax) Skin Cure, like many other inestimable benefits to mankind, was discovered by accident. The proprietor, engaged in the preparation of certain plants, from time to time noticed the effect of working in the pulp vats on the skin. If there was present any cutaneous eruptions, warts, blemishes or scrofulous symptoms all disappeared as if by magic. After experimenting ten years, it has become a scientific fact and a priceless boon to the human race. From giving away a few bottles the demand has increased until the sale for the past two years amounts to 1,032,000 bottles. Large bottles only $1,00.

TAKING MEDICINE.

Sensible Suggestions About the Folly of Overdosing.

Physicians prescribe less medicine now than used to be the custom in former days, and possibly would give still fewer doses if it were not for the prejudices of their patients, who feel that nothing is being done for their cure unless they have something to take. The truth is that often pure air, rest, and absence from food for a time is all that is needed to give relief, and the conscientious doctor hesitates to order drugs which he knows are unnecessary. If a person who is suffering from fever is shut up in an unventilated room, breathing the same air over and over again, covered with twice as many bed clothes as are required for him he might take cold, and given whatever food he can be persuaded to eat, the fever is not likely to abate. Yet, if when the physician came he were to say, "open the window, take off all the blankets but one, give him a cool sponge bath every three hours, and let him have nothing but milk, cracked ice and cold water, and then go away without prescribing further, the friends of the sufferer would shake their heads and sich to [illegible] "We must send for some new doctor at once. DARING AND SUFFERING.

ing the personal question, he declared that he had no hard feelings toward the south or her people, with whom he had long been well acquainted; that they were generous and brave; he knew they were fighting for what they believed was right, but they were terribly deceived. Their leaders had not permitted them to know the facts in the case, and they were [illegible] section of the nation for a mere defeat. He declared that the people of the north followed the whole nation and the flag, and were fighting to uphold them, not to do any injury to the south, and that when victory came the south would reap the benefit [illegible] as the north. The guilt of the war would rest upon those who had misled the southern people, and induced them to engage in a causeless and hopeless rebellion. He told them that all whose lives were spared for, but a short time would regret the part they had taken in this rebellion, and that the old Union would yet be restored, and the flag of our common country wave over the very ground occupied by this scaffold.

There were tears coursing rapidly down the cheeks of many Confederate soldiers; the emotion of a number of negroes who were a long way off, yet in easy hearing of the trumpet like voice, was almost uncontrollable. One of them said to Capt. Sarratt two years after, "Massa, if that man had only spoke a few minutes longer they could never have hung him in the world." A rebel officer was heard to mutter, "Why don't they stop him? What do they allow such talk for?" But it was not so easy to stop a dying man, whose words were so kind and persuasive, and whose eloquence was of that highest type which throws a spell over friend and enemy.

So the tide of truthful speech flowed on till many of the poor men in the rebel [illegible] for the first time the full arraignment of their own guilty government with a clearness which carried conviction, and then with the bold prophecy of coming triumph for the glorious cause—a prospect which seemed to lift the speaker above all fear of his own death—the hero closed, giving the sign for the deed of shame—dying with this glorious prediction on his lips!

Nowollins had been provided. As soon as life was pronounced extinct the bodies were laid in the shallow trench, just wide enough for their length, and long enough for all the seven to lie close together—a brotherhood in death as they had been in life. Here the earth was filled in, and they remained till, at the close of the war, the national government removed their bodies to an honored spot in the beautiful national cemetery at Chattanooga. A monument should mark both this spot and that in Atlanta, where heroism in death shone so brightly.

CHAPTER XXIII.

CONVULSION AND RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

Those who remained in prison suffered scarcely less than their comrades. The bitterness of death was upon us also. We did not think that vengeance would stop with those who had fallen. The hope we had so long cherished was overturned at a blow. In Knoxville we had urged that all should be tried together, or that the sentence of one should stand for all. There was no reason for giving any preference to one over another, and no indication that such preference was to be given. But even if we had not believed that only a few days or hours of prisonlife lay between us and the scaffold, the parting from our loved friends, whose voices were yet tingling in our ears while they themselves had passed beyond the gates of death, was enough to break the stoutest heart. There were tears then in eyes that would not have quivered in the presence of any danger.

But I could not shed a tear. A cloud of burning heat rushed to my head, and fever seemed to scorch through every vein. For hours I scarcely could realize where I was or the loss that had been suffered. Every glance around the room, revealing the vacant places of friends, would bring our sorrow freshly upon us again. Grief for our comrades and apprehension for ourselves were unmerciefully blended. The saddeness of the shock by which we were separated seemed to reveal a spirit that forbade us to hope, while it was a terrible aggravation of the pain of parting. Thus the afternoon hours slowly drifted by under a shadow too dark for words. No one ventured as yet to speak of hope.

The first distraction in this terrible hour we owed to our friendly jailer. He asked us if we would like to be all put in one room.

We were eager for this privilege, and he brought over the eight who were in the front room and placed them with us. We were now fourteen, including Capt. Fry, of East Tennessee fame, who was placed with us. There would have been much to talk about in our separate experiences in Knoxville and Chattanooga at any other time, but now the thought of the lost swallowed up everything else.

At length some voice suggested—rather faintly at first, for only a few hours before it would have met keen ridicule—that it would be well for us to pray. The thought was warmly welcomed. Not the slightest objection was offered by anyone, and we at once all knelt. One member of the party has lately told me that while he knelt with the rest, and was careful to say nothing to discourage us, yet he never led in prayer, or said anything to indicate that he had changed his life purpose. I did not notice the exception at the time, as every head was bowed and every face covered. Capt. Fry was first requested to lead us, which was peculiarly appropriate, as he had always maintained a consistent religious life, and now seemed to feel our great sorrow as if it were his own. He prayed with despairingness, strong sobs mingling with his fervent petitions. Then others led, and we continued until all but the one already alluded to had prayed in turn, even those who had prayed before began again. There seemed to be some help in simply telling our trouble. On my own part, I do not think that there was a great deal of faith, at least so far as temporal deliverance was concerned, but there came a calmness and a passing away of bitterness that was restful to aching hearts. We besought God mainly that he would prepare us for the fate that seemed inevitable, and that as he had led us into great trials he would in some manner sustain us there. We kept on praying with but short intervals till the sun went down. As twilight deepened into darkness—the emblem of our own lives—our petitions grew more solemn. God seemed nearer than ever before. In the darkness it appeared easier to behold the heavenly light. We began to ask for deliverance in this world as well as in the hour of death, and to have a hope, very faint and trembling, that it might be granted. Then little by little we began to profess our purpose to live religious lives while we were spared, whether the time was long or short. I do not know that there was anything clear and definite in the way of conversion or sudden change on the part of any; but when it is remembered that in the forenoon we had amused ourselves by all kind of games, that profane words and jests were not uncommon, [illegible] and have been ashamed to [illegible] or of religion in any way [illegible] theory, it will be seen [illegible] was no slight alteration in us. From that hour I date the birth [illegible]

And in this experience I am not alone.

It is an interesting fact, which the rationalist may explain as he will, that from the time of that long prison prayer meeting—from early afternoon to midnight—the fortunes of our party began to improve. There were fearful times still before us, not much inferior to any that we had passed; we long held our lives by the frailest thread; yet till the close of the war, though many perished around us, death did not claim another victim from our midst. We committed ourselves to the Lord, not expecting deliverance in this world, and in his boundless mercy he bestowed upon us all we asked, and far more than we had dared to hope.

Few things in our whole prison experience were more fearful than awakening the next morning. The chief light of a new day—the dispelling of dreams that may have been very pleasant and have brought home vividly before us—always made the morning hour the most dreary of the day. But on this occasion we looked around and saw the places of our friends vacant, and all the great sorrow of our bereavement again rolled over us like the incoming of the [illegible]

But we wished to do something. A small Bible was borrowed from Mr. Turner when he came to bring our scanty breakfast—Mr. Thoer, who was always with him to see that he gave us no undue indulgence, did not object, and then we had reading, singing and prayer—nearly every one praying that it might rather be called a morning prayer meeting than "family worship," though the latter was the title used. We now resolved to continue this practice as long as our prison life lasted.

From this time forward we had religious exercises morning and evening, and found them a great consolation and support. They began and closed the day aright, and thus added sweetness to all its hours, supplying a subject for thought not bearing directly upon our own gloomy prospects, and thus enabling us to maintain better mental health. We always sung a hymn or two on these occasions. Indeed there was nearly as much singing as at Chattanooga, but of a far different and more inspiring character. Instead of "Nettie More," "Carrier Dove" and such harmless sentimentality, we sang "Rock of Ages," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," and others of a pronounced spiritual cast. This greatly astonished the guards. They were given strict charge to watch us closely, with the statement that we were the most desperate characters in the whole United States, then to hear us sing Methodist hymns, and to know that we had prayers, morning and evening, was a contradiction they found it hard to reconcile. Soon the story of the heroic death of our comrades and our own religious bearing was talked about Atlanta, and no doubt there were many expressions which gave some colour for the bitter complaint of "sycophancy" made afterward by the provost marshal in his report. But we cared comparatively little for this, of which, indeed, we then knew nothing. We had never expected to receive much help from the people outside, and would not have dared, for fear of treachery, to accept it if offered. But we wished to find that peace in believing that we had heard of Christians possessing. What would we not now have given for the counsels and assistance of a minister we could fully trust!

It is a delicate matter to speak of the beginning of one's own religious life—to say neither too much nor too little, but in the hope of guiding some other who is feeling after the truth, I will venture, using the light that twenty-five years have thrown back on those early days.

After the terrible 18th of June I am not conscious of any experience of a religious character for several days, except a profound and burning conviction that it is folly to wait for death before trying to be right with God. I might be sinful or wicked again, but the idea that the great business of life may safely be left to the last could influence me no more. Just how to be religious was a puzzle. I knew if I had a command to execute from an army officer I would do it, if in my power, no matter how difficult or dangerous, and I wished intensely that it was just as easy to be religious as to be a soldier. But there was the question of right feelings and right motives that did not seem to come into play very much in the army, for if a soldier did his duty, he was not apt to be asked how he felt about it. I had the belief that I must have joy and rapture in thinking of death, a readiness to shout God's praises which I did not feel; and for a time it seemed as if I could never reach a genuine conversion. I diligently read the Bible which we had borrowed, but while I enjoyed many things in it, little direct guidance for me was found.

I asked counsel of Capt. Fry, for whom I had the greatest esteem and respect. But it was so easy for him to believe that I thought his case must be very unlike my own. I also spoke to J. R. Porter, the only one of our number who had a clear religious faith, and seemed to be happy in it. His first answer was very striking. I asked how he felt about death. He thought that I referred to our worldly prospects, and answered that probably we would soon all be put to death. "But what is your feeling about death itself?" I continued. He said:

"I am not afraid to die, if it is God's will. I trust him now, and I expect to trust him to the last." He took a hymn-book, and there was a steady light in his eye that made me believe every word he said. But when I asked him how he got such a faith he could only tell me that he went to a Methodist "mourners' bench" two years before and sought till he found it. This did me no good, for there was no such place accessible here.

In sore perplexity I read the Bible from day to day and prayed, taking my turn in praying aloud and reading with the others. At length I thought I began to see that trusting Christ meant something like taking his words and teachings for my guide, trying to do all that he commands and leaving the result, with God, of this, with him. This was not that sudden transformation that I had hoped, but I soon found that it opened up a good many things that I had never dreamed of. One of these seemed especially strange under the circumstances. I had yet but a slender hope of ever escaping from the prison except by the way of the scaffold. But in spite of the dark prospect the question came as an absolute test of my obedience, "Will you if satisfied that it is God's will, be ready to give up the profession of law if you ever get home and go into the ministry?" The first and spontaneous reply was, "No!" I had studied law and meant to practice it if I ever got where law reigned. But at once the self response was clear, "What kind of obedience is this?" I saw that I was not sincere in proposing to enlist under Christ as my captain, unless I would really obey him. It would be a poor allegiance that stopped short with the things I wanted to do. For a long time I could not pass this point. The prison companions seemed utterly absurd. "Try to serve God in the prison where you are," they said with a rough plausibility. "And don't bother about preaching; being a lawyer, or anything else, when you get out, for you never will get out." This seemed good advice, but it would not bring a serene mind or the victory over the fear of death which I so much desired. One after another of those in the prison found the comfort I lacked, and it was not till wearied and worn out with the struggle that I vowed if God would only give me his peace, I would serve him as sincerely in the prison or out of it as I had tried to serve my country, and, in any way that he might direct. Oh! that this vow had been always more faithfully kept!

From this time I did have a steady conviction that I was on the Lord's side, and that I had a right to commit myself and my life to his keeping. The prison did not prove a palace; its discomforts were still felt keenly, and the prospect of death by the gallows did not appear more inviting. I would not have been the less ready to make any desperate venture for escape; but I had a hope which went beyond the prison and the scaffold—beyond any contingency of earthly fortune, while it did not take away any real earthly good.

We all remember with deepest gratitude the Rev. George G. N. MacDonell, one of those who attended our comrades on the day of death. We did not see either of the clergymen then, or know who they were, or, indeed, that there was such attendance until long after. Whether Rev. Mr. Scott did visit us or not I am unable to state with positiveness. A minister came, and I was afterward told that his name was Scott, but he may have been another person, as I think this one was not a resident of the city. The interview in this latter case was unpleasant. The preacher had been brought in by our old jailer on the very natural presumption that persons who prayed and sung so much would like to meet a clergyman. He promised the officer of the guard that he would talk only about religion. But his first question built up an impassable barrier between us. He asked how we could be so wicked as to come down there and fight against the south and try to overturn their government? We had been trying to repent of our sins, but had not got so far as that particular one yet, and answered a little tartly by asking how he and his friends could be so wicked as to rebel against a good government. He answered by a reference to the north trying to overthrow slavery, and I asked him if it was possible that he, a minister, was an apologist for slavery? It happened that he was a zealous defender of the institution and very sensitive on this point, and so much noise was soon made in the discussion that the guard removed him. He did not come again.

But our interview and subsequent acquaintance with Rev. Mr. MacDonell was of a very different character, though it also opened unpromisingly. In his first prayer he petitioned very earnestly that our lives might be spared if consistent with the good of the Confederacy! This offended some of us, but the better opinion was that if sincere in his loyalty to the rebel authority, he could hardly have prayed differently. So kind was he to us afterward that some thought he might possibly be a Union man in real sentiments, but he has since assured me that he was not in the slightest degree, and that all he did for us was at the dictates of humanity and religion. We had a very pleasant interview. He gave us valuable counsel, and I felt it a great privilege to talk over religious questions with one so intelligent and sympathetic. When he left he promised to send us some books, and did not forget to promptly forward them. These we took good care of, read thoroughly to all in the room and then returned, asking for more. These he generally gave, and we thus continued till we had read nearly his whole library. Those only who know what a dreadful weariness it is to pass days without any definite employment can realize the great boon these good books bestowed on us. It made the prison room a veritable school; and in view of our religious efforts the character of the books was just what we would most have desired. I did not care, as in Knoxville, for law books, but the fact that, many, though not all, of the minister's books were of a theological and religious cast only made them the more welcome. This Atlanta jail was my theological seminary!

CHAPTER XXIV.

A DARING ESCAPE PLANNED.

From the very beginning of our imprisonment we had thought and planned for escape. A very hopeful scheme had been foiled at Chattanooga by the separation of the band when the twelve were sent to Knoxville. Andrews and Wallace actually gotten outside the prison, the latter remaining at large [illegible] days. How to escape was a [illegible] conversation which never ceased. We felt that if once [illegible] our chance of [illegible] clear to Richmond [illegible] dant surprises in the debts, was [illegible] greater than in the south, [illegible] over all the errors [illegible] leaving the train, and each [illegible] the benefit of all the know[illegible] raphy he possessed.

But in many other ways [illegible] favorably situated now [illegible] we had ever been [illegible] was greatly [illegible] Buell had been [illegible] Ohio river. knew of the danger it indicated at the time indirectly. Our guard was strengthened; the jailor was overheard by a prisoner in another room saying: "Those Ohio men will soon all be hung!" The commander of the post, Col. Lee, visited us and asked of us almost the same question Davis asked, as to the difference between our case and that of our comrades, and urged great vigilance on the guards.

These things convinced us that our only chance of life was by taking the matter in our own hands. One plan proposed was to try to get out secretly at night, by sawing off the bars of our windows and lowering ourselves, one by one, to the ground. The fatal objections to it were that it required us to await a dark night, and even then it was scarcely possible that more than one or two would get out before an alarm was given. I had no hope from it.

But the other plan could not fail if every man did his exact duty, and we were now so well acquainted that we had perfect confidence in each other. It was simply to attack our foes in broad daylight. When our food was brought in the afternoon, and the door opened, we could rush out, seizing and holding perfectly quiet the jailer and his assistant, threatening them with death if they moved, unlocking all the doors so that we might have the assistance of all the prisoners, and then charge upon the seven soldiers below, dispossessing them of their muskets in the first rush; and if this was done without noise or alarm, march them up into our room and gag them there. It was not likely, however, that we would be able to keep everything quiet enough for this; in which case we were to run as soon as an alarm was raised, for we knew that there was a strong guard close by, and did not feel able to reckon with any more than the seven rebels on hand.

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris, Tex., by the remarkble recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley, who was so helpless he could not turn in bed, or raise his head; everybody said he was dying of Consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief, he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of Pills and two bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six pounds.

An Intelligent Dog.

In Boston, the writer saw an instance of intelligence on the part of a dog the other day which was very remarkable as uniting a high degree of politeness with excellent understanding. Crossing the ferry from East Boston he noticed, sitting on one side of the passageway, a gentleman who was accompanied by an immense and very handsome St. Bernard dog. Directly opposite were two young ladies who could not restrain their admiration for the dog, and made evident signs of a desire to be friendly with him. The dog, however, looked up at his master and declined to budge. But presently the gentleman remarked quietly: "Go over and see the ladies," whereupon the animal moved promptly across the passageway and wagged his tail amiably while the young ladies patted his head and raved over him.

But presently came the remarkable exhibition of politeness referred to. The wharf was reached and the passengers rose and moved toward the street cars. One of the young women carried a basket, and this basket the dog insisted upon taking in his mouth. The lady gave it to him and he walked proudly toward the car with it, casting a glance at his master, who remained standing on the platform. He entered the street car with the basket, deposited it in the lap of the young lady when she had seated herself, and then whisked ponderously out and rejoined his master. It was a clear case of a friendly service courteously performed.

A Rubbing Pet.

Men have made pets of all sorts of creeping things. Even fleas have been so domesticated as to work for their trainer's profit. A noted Frenchwoman scores amusement in the society of a petition, who, being young, is allowed the run of her apartments.

HOPE FOR CONSUMPTIVES!

A New Theory of the Dread Disease Which Seems Very Sensible.

In fifty per cent. of the cases consumption is only the symptom of some other disease!

The disease in such [illegible] cured until the cause, whatever it is, is removed.

More than half the victims of consumption have albumen in the water.

"What does this indicate?"

Albumen cannot appear in the urine as it escapes from the body, if the organs [illegible] take the water from the blood.

We drink water [illegible] times every day. This water [illegible] the body and washes away the waste matter and decay of the system, and takes it to the kidneys. If these organs are healthy, this waste in solution in the water is removed by them. If not, the natural action is reversed, and, instead of removing the waste, that poisonous stuff remains in the blood, but the life-giving element or the albumen [illegible]

Fancy the effect!

This uric acid waste is a rank poison, and attacks the weakest organ first. The [illegible] Hospital of London, England, shows in reports that 52 per cent. of the victims of consumption are [illegible] victims of [illegible] disease, [illegible] ing trouble, [illegible] shown by the presence of albumen in the blood, to be but [illegible] of kidney derangement. The use of pulmonary troubles being authoritatively shown to be faulty, even though unsuspected action of the kidneys, explains why, in order to master the dreaded consumption one must [illegible] blood of the uric acid irritant, which inflames and burns up the lung substance. For this purpose, there is nothing equal to that great specific, Warner's Safe Cure. This remedy has won the favor of medical men all over the world, purely on its merits. We have no doubt that if the kidneys are kept in natural action, consumption and a great many other diseases, caused by uric acid, will not only be cured, but will be prevented.

J. W. Westlake, of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, had a sister residing in Michigan who was thought surely to be going with consumption. She took ten bottles of Warner's safe cure, which he sent her, and he says: "That was the last I heard of her consumption." Thousands of such cases are developed every day.

"Dip your finger in acid every day, and it soon festers and is destroyed. Send acid poisoned blood through the lungs every second and they soon give way.

This then, is the condition of things that always precedes consumption. First weakened kidneys, second, retained uric acid, poisoning the blood, the development of disease in the lungs by the irritant acids passing through them. Then there is a little cough in the morning, soon, the yellow matter is spit up, followed by loss of flesh and strength with dreadful night sweats, and when the patient goes to his school physician for help he is put on cod liver oil, which his stomach, weakened also by uric acid in the blood, cannot digest. Because there is no pain present in the kidneys the patient does not think they are affected, but the kidney acid is doing its work every minute, every hour, day and night, and by and by the disease of the lungs has advanced until pus is developed, then comes hemorrhages, and at last the glassy stare of the eyes, which denotes that the end is near.

A post-mortem examination of such cases shows that the terrible uric acid has completely destroyed the substance of the lung.

It is impossible to cure lung diseases when the blood is poisoned with uric

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.
The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.
It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.
The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.
WHAT IT CURES.
All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attended with Inflammation.
It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame, every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and tenement is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.
Over 40 Years.
This ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends, if but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.
Prices 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

CHAUTAUQUA—ITS INSTITUTIONS AND INFLUENCE.

Essay Read at the Farmer's Institute in Tecumseh, by Miss Eunice Davidson.

On the shore of that beautiful lake lifted up 1400 ft. above the sea, without river, creek or brook emptying into it, supplied entirely by crystal waters from natural springs, surrounded by green fields and beautiful forests, has arisen a wonderful city, a world prevailing idea, a heavenly influence. This city, idea, and influence have risen as high above those of ordinary life as that beautiful lake rises above the other waters of our nation and is as pure as the crystal springs that form that sparkling, rippling, famous lake. Thousands of hearts all over the world are to-day thanking the Father of all mercies that He, through tender love and kindness, put into the heart of his servant, to form a method whereby people deprived of educational advantages, have been able to "go to college" in their own homes. In 1873 Dr. Vincent, of Pamelia, N. Y., and Lewis Miller, of Akron, Ohio, visited what was then called Fair Point, N. Y., and formed what was then known as the Chautauqua Sunday School Assembly. The opening words on the first evening in 1874 were words from the Holy Bible. Thus the first vocal utterance at Chautauqua was divine and its mission has been to study the word and hearty the works of God. If the daily drill and friendly discussions, plans of teaching and criticism both favorable and adverse, were beneficial to the Sunday School workers why should not these methods applied to other books and other workers be equally effective, and from this tiny seed sprang up that mighty power, The Chautauqua Idea. One of the most important of its institutions is the C. L. S. C. This is a school at home, a school after school, a college without walls. It is for busy people who left school years ago, it is for high school and college graduates, for those who never entered high school or college, for merchants, mechanics, mothers, busy house keepers, farmer boys, shop girls, and all others who desire wisdom and knowledge. All work, kitchen work, farm work, shop work as well as school work are divine and in their rough shells are hidden rare pearls of wondrous beauty. They are means of discipline in the highest quality of character, and through them come some of the greatest and mightiest energies from the heavens. In 1885 there were upon the record books more than one hundred thousand names of people in all conditions, classes, and circumstances. Some of them were over eighty years of age and all were eagerly striving in their own methods for mental and moral improvement. The farmer with his long winter evenings, the busy mother, with her few moments of leisure, the sailor on the ocean, the conductor and brakeman on a freight train, the minister in his study, the mechanic in his shop, and even the prisoner in his cell are all striving with his might to gain a mastery over ignorance and self. This course of reading, like any other work may be done thoroughly or superficially, just as the student himself desires. Realizing the truth of the statement made by Gibbon, that "The best and most important part of every man's education, is that which he gives himself," the Chautauqua University was formed and incorporated under the laws of the State of New York. Under this provision and through the correspondence system one may in their own homes, though thousands of miles from Chautauqua, read, write, study, think and be examined with a thoroughness and precision that cannot be excelled in the class room of other colleges. One after completing such a course may justly take as much pride in the result as the graduate of Ann Arbor or Philadelphia. Another of the many Chautauqua institutions is the C. L. & C. E., under the direction of Charles Bayard, of N. Y., who thus states its aims and works. "It is a town and country association of young people who wish to know something and be something, and do something. It is a garden school with plants and animals for companions and friends and books for guides. For teachers, it has a farmer, a gardener, a florist, a herdsman, a shepherd, a dairy maid, a poultry keeper, and other people who know all about dogs, birds, ducks, rabbits, fish, and every plant or useful creature on the farm or in the water. The objects of this association are five fold. First—to help its members to learn something about the earth on which we live, its plants, flowers and fruits, and to make the acquaintance of the plants and animals on the farm and in the house. Secondly—To help its members to become trained, skillful and accomplished. Thirdly—To show them how to use their skill and knowledge in gaining health and happiness. Fourthly—To show its members how money is earned, to point out the way to many useful trades and arts, and to show them the value of good, honest work. Lastly—To show by the study of nature, something of the Creator's wonderful ways in managing this beautiful world. The head quarters of this work is at Houghton Farm Mountainville, Orange Co. N. Y. To no class of people does Chautauqua and its institutions bring greater opportunities than to the large class of farmers throughout all directions from our cities and villages. From the homes of these farmers, no matter how humble or elegant, goes out a [illegible] influence which may, by increased ability among its individuals, become much more powerful and effective. And if ever the evil and corruption that is now sweeping over our country like a mighty wave of pestilence, is driven from within our borders, it will be through the influence, and through the ballots of the farmers of our nation. Through the C. L. S. C., the parents and young people, in their secluded country homes may read, study, and discuss the same studies that interest and instruct the student in college. Through the University they may thoroughly learn book-keeping, penmanship, short-hand, any or all of the languages, normal class work, and in other ways prepare themselves for the battle of life. Through the C. T. & C. C. each may, while reading the prescribed course, be doing something especially suited to their individual taste, and are expected to observe as well as do. One may observe the height of the thermometer and barometer and make out the weather report; another may report of his care of a horse, a dog, a bird, or even carp in a pond. One may take anything he likes from the programme, providing he does it well, and reports it correctly. By this means they acquire a practical knowledge whose value can not be estimated in dollars and cents. On a visit to Chautauqua, one can not help being impressed with the excellent facilities there offered to students. In the School of Language Building, the different rooms are filled with students, each intent upon the particular study to which they are devoting their time, and under the leadership of such skilled and enthusiastic teachers, that they literally walk, talk, eat, sleep, and dream in the study in which they are engaged. The boys are drilled as a company of soldiers while the girls and ladies are taught gymnastics and scientific walking. The exhibition given by the children's calisthenic corps, accompanied by piano music, was one of the most interesting features of the programme. The click of the typewriter, and the miniature short hand machine called stenograph, are constantly heard, as the different students practice their allotted hours. Book-keeping taught in one room, while the dots and dashes of short-hand is taught in another—all seem busy. Ladies with their gingham aprons are hurrying toward the cooking school, while others with their linen aprons are hastening toward the clay modeling room. In Normal Hall is a class for the improvement of memory. In the museum is the kindergarten, and all those people with bright yellow bodies are microscopists whose meetings were full of interest to both members and outsiders. Among the many treats upon the programme were the concerts by a choir of two hundred voices, organ recitals, and sermons by such ministers as Dr. John Hall, Sam Jones, Dewitt Talmage, Dr. Vincent and others. Singing by the Courtney Ladies quartett, Amherst College Glee Club, and the justly celebrated Schubert quartett. Recognition day was the great day, when nearly seven hundred graduates received their diplomas, and as that vast audience of 8,000 people gave the absent president the Chautauqua salute—which salute consisted in waving the handkerchief together with the pretty pink, blue, yellow, and white programmes with which they were supplied, the sight was one never to be forgotten. With, the bands, cadets, chancellors, little flower girls, graduates of the past, present, and future years all in marching line, it was indeed a great day. The next day of importance was Grand Army Day, when 1,000 of the "boys in blue" marched to martial music into the Amphitheater to listen to Mary A. Livermore's stirring lecture on The Women of the War, and Ex Senator Howe's sensible treatment of capital and labor difficulties. As 2,200 excursionists came that day in addition to the thousands on the ground, you may be sure that those talented speakers did not lack interested listeners. Will Carlton—Michigan's poet—was met at every reading by large and interested audiences, and well they might be, as his poems touch first the heart, then the head, and are profitable to both. The originator and prime mover in all this grand Chautauqua scheme is Dr. J. H. Vincent and in no way can one become better acquainted with his inmost thoughts, than at the Sunday afternoon vesper service. This service is held in the Hall of Philosophy, a building erected a short distance from the lake and made to represent the Parthenon of ancient Athens, and there the members of the C. L. S. C. are the favored guests. The time chosen for this service was in remembrance of the hour when Dr Vincent's mother on Sunday afternoon took her children to her own room and there instructed them how to live and how to die. So sacred were those words, and so sacred her memory that even now after thirty three years absence to that "better home," those gray haired sons can not speak of those sacred times to each other. How much of that wonderful influence exerted by Dr Vincent, all over this broad land, may be traced to those five o'clock talks of his mother, only the recording angel knows. May Chautauqua, its institutions and influence, go on until it shall raise up a people, who not only "Study the Word and the Works of God" but "Keep our Heavenly Father in the midst."

THE LATE CHIEF JUSTICE WAITE.

The death of Hon. Morrison R. Waite, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States was announced on the 23d inst. The deceased had many personal acquaintances in this section of Michigan during his residence in Toledo, and he was always held in the highest esteem by those with whom he came in contact. The following biographical sketch gives a fair resume of his busy life.

Morrison Remick Waite was born in Lyme, Conn., November 29, 1816. His ancestors came from England in the early colonial times, and settled in Massachusetts, but removed to Lyme about the year 1677. One of the earliest, whose name has been preserved, was Thomas Waite, whose son Marvin was on the first electoral ticket of Connecticut, after the Revolution, and served nineteen terms in the General Assembly, and as Judge of the County Court for several years. Remick Waite, who married Susannah Maston, was a half brother of Judge Marvin Waite. The eldest son of Remick, Henry Matson, was born in Lyme, February 9, 1787; graduated at Yale College in 1809. A lawyer of learning and ability, he was successively elected to both the lower and the higher branches of the State Legislature. In 1834 he was chosen an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Connecticut, and in 1834 was appointed Chief Justice of that court, which office he held till he reached the age of 70 years, the limit prescribed by the State Constitution. In 1816 he married a daughter of Col. Richard Selden, of Lyme, and a grand daughter of Col. Samuel Selden, an officer of the Revolutionary Army.

Morrison R. Waite was the oldest of the eight children of Chief Justice Henry Matson and Maria Selden Waite. He entered Yale College at the age of 17 years and graduated with honor in the class of 1837 with William M. Evarts, Edwards Pierrepont and Prof. Benjamin Silliman, Jr. After graduating he began the study of law in his father's office at Lyme. In October, 1838, he went to Ohio and continued his studies in the office of Samuel M. Young, then a prominent attorney of Maumee City. On his admission to the bar in 1849 he formed a partnership with Mr. Young. In 1859 he was elected to represent the Maumee district in the Ohio Legislature. At the expiration of his term, in 1850, his firm opened an office in Toledo, of which Mr. Waite took charge, and was soon acknowledged as a leading counselor and advocate in Northwestern Ohio. One who often met him as opposing counsel said that "his assertion on any subject of law was always accepted as indisputable." In 1852 Mr. Young removed to Toledo and the firm of Young & Waite continued until Mr. Waite's youngest brother, Richard, came to the bar, when the brothers entered into a partnership, which lasted till the senior partner's elevation to the Chief-Justiceship.

He was a Whig in politics until the disbandment of the party, after which he became a Republican. An active and influential member of his party, he never became recognized as a party leader, the conservative tendency of his mind leading him in opposition to radical political measures. This was shown during the war in his support of the policy of President Lincoln rather than the more summary measures advocated by some of the anti-slavery leaders. But to all war measures of the government he gave earnest and effective support, making himself especially useful in aiding the recruiting service of the army. In 1862 he ran as independent Republican in the Tenth Congressional District in Ohio, the call for the convention which nominated him being signed by Republicans and Democrats, who pledged themselves to "the maintenance of the government and the determined prosecution of the war; to the putting down of the rebellion and the restoration of the Union." The regular Republican convention nominated James M. Ashley, and adopted a radical anti slavery platform, demanding the confiscation of the property of leading rebels, and other extreme measures. Edward Phelps was brought out as a regular Democratic candidate. Ashley was elected by a plurality of 1,127 votes although in an actual minority of 4,105. A vacancy upon the Supreme Court of Ohio was tendered to Mr. Waite by Gov. Brough, but he declined it.

His national reputation dates from his selection by President Grant in November, 1871 as one of the counsel to represent the United States before the Tribunal of Arbitration at Geneva, Switzerland, his associates being Wm. M. Evarts and Caleb Cushing. This appointment came to him unsought, he not even being aware that such a position was to be filled. He was in New York, closing up an important case, when the dispatch informing him of his appointment by the President reached him, being forwarded to him from Toledo. He immediately accepted this appointment and left for Geneva, early in the following month of December, where he performed the required service to the entire satisfaction of the government and the country. His already good reputation as an international lawyer was greatly enhanced by the ability which characterized his labors in behalf of his country in this historical tribunal. His argument on the liability of the English Government for permitting Confederate steamers to take supplies of coal in its ports, was regarded as an effort displaying great logical power and comprehensive grasp of international questions. On September 17, 1872, the arbitrators rendered their decision that Great Britian had failed in her powers as a neutral, in the cases of the Alabama, Florida, Shenandoah and their tenders, and awarded the United States the sum of $15,500,000 in gold, which was promptly paid.

He returned from Geneva in November, 1872, and resumed the practice of his profession in Toledo. In the same year the honorary degree of LL. D. was conferred upon him by his alma mater. In January of the year 1873 he was, on the motion of Caleb Cushing, admitted to practice in the United States Supreme Court. In the following April he was nominated by both political parties and unanimously elected to the convention called to form a new Constitution for the State of Ohio and, upon its assembling in May, he was chosen its President. The death of Chief Justice Chase occurred May 7, 1873, creating a vacancy in the highest judicial office in the United States. After Attorney General George H. Williams and Caleb Cushing had been successively nominated for this position and withdrawn, President Grant sent to the Senate the name of Morrison R. Waite, January 20, 1874. This appointment was also unsolicited by him. The Constitutional Convention, over which he was presiding, being then in session, a member advancing to offer congratulations found him ignorant of his nomination. His appointment was received with approval throughout the country, being alike acceptable to the Senate, the bar and the people generally, irrespective of party. The vote for his confirmation was unanimous. He took the oath of office March 4, 1874, and immediately entered upon the duties of his high position.

Justice Waite had a very serious attack of illness just at the close of the administration of President Arthur. He was confined to his house for several weeks with erysipelas, that theatened at one time to have a fatal termination. The serious character of his illness at that time was not generally known until after the crisis had been passed, and it was not until he became well enough to be up and about his house on I street that newspaper paragraphs appeared reporting him to be in danger. The Justice was a hale man to look at, but he had a stroke of paralysis some years ago, and his friends have been solicitous about him on that account, fearing a recurrence of the old symptoms. After his recovery from this illness he traveled and sought recreation by prolonged abstention from the duties of the Supreme Court.

Chief Justice Waite was married September 21, 1840, to Amelia C. Warner, of Lyme, Conn.

Mrs. Morgan Talks to Doctor Lynch.

MANCHESTER, Mich., Sept., 1887.

Doctor.—Do you remember me counciling with you some months ago about my rheumatism, and that one of my lower limbs was partially paralyzed from its effects. I asked you about the the Syrup, and you replied to me that if there was any thing under the sun that would cure me to take it. So I commenced using Hubbard's Rheumatic Syrup, and I want to say to you that it is the greatest medicine in the world, I firmly believe. That dizziness that troubled me as well as the rheumatism is cured, and my blood is in a healthy condition. My appetite and sleep are both good, and I am healthy. Doctor, that is a great family medicine, and you need not hesitate to recommend it.

MRS. THOMAS MORGAN.

SCROFULA, dyspepsia, gout and erysipelas, or any of the diseases arising from an enfeebled condition of the system, can be effectually cured by the great blood purifier, Hubbard's Rheumatic Syrup.

Acker's Blood Elixir is the only Blood Remedy guaranteed. It is a positive cure for Ulcers, Eruptions or Syphilitic Poisoning. It purifies the whole system, and banishes all Rheumatic and Neuralgic pains. We guarantee it.

Brooklyn, Jackson Co., Mich.

BAND BENEFIT.

On Tuesday evening of next week, April 3d, the Tecumseh City Band will favor our citizens with another of their choice instrumental concerts. Prof. C. A. Boehme, the Director of the Michigan and Ohio band association, and other musicians connected with that organization are to be in Tecumseh on that day to confer with our band in regard to the tournament which will take place here in August next. The band therefore concluded that it would be a very opportune time to give a concert, as they would secure valuable assistance from abroad. A fine program has been prepared, and we hope to see the house crowded. There will be a fine street parade at four o'clock in the afternoon. At the evening exercises Miss Jennie Root will preside at the piano and two or three vocal selections will be given by some of our best home talent. The tickets have been placed at 25 and 15 cents, and there will be no extra charge attached to reserved seats. Let us all turn out and give the boys a benefit that means something.

A HINT TO THE LADIES.

There are doubtless no ladies in Tecumseh who do not know that "regrets" should be sent as soon as possible after receiving an invitation they cannot accept, whether the company is large or small, but there are many who do not do it, thus causing the hostess the trouble to prepare for them, or preventing her filling their places with other friends. One lady tells of inviting fifty and only entertaining thirty-three, with regrets from two or three. There are many too, who seem to pay no attention to the time the invitation is given, but go when it seems convenient to them, thus often keeping the lady of the house waiting and causing great annoyance. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Please, Sisters, be a little more thoughtful.

A SUFFERER.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAR. 29, 1888.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

This is the last week of Lent.

Band benefit next Tuesday evening.

O. P. Bills went to Toledo Tuesday.

The Industrial home at Adrian has 207 inmates.

Frank Silvers was in Jackson on business Monday.

To-morrow is Good Friday and next Sunday is Easter.

D. C. Baldwin, of Toledo, was in town yesterday.

L. J. Bidwell went to Coldwater, Mich., last Monday.

Special Easter services at St. Peter's church next Sunday.

Will J. C. Hastings was in Detroit last Thursday and Friday.

Mrs. J. H. Smith and daughter visited friends at Adrian Tuesday.

Five cords of good four foot wood wanted at this office immediately.

Mrs. C. E. Gridley returned to her home at East Waverly last Tuesday.

The hens are putting in full time this week, or at least they ought to be.

The will be a triangular fight next Monday and it is likely to be a hot one.

Miss Bertha Covell, of Adrian, is spending a few days at home with her mother.

E. VanDemark and G. Codling, of Clinton, were in town last Monday on business.

Bishop Harris will make his annual visit to St. Peter's church, on Sunday, April 8th.

Mr. I. H. Schreder is nursing a sick finger, owing to his trying to feel the edge of a picket saw.

Vote for the best men next Monday and get your tickets and slips printed at the HERALD office.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hayden went to Milan Tuesday, on account of the sickness of Mrs. Albert Hayden.

The band will offer a superior program next Tuesday evening. Let us all turn out and give them a rousing house.

One hundred dollars has been subscribed for the extension of the Clinton telegraph line with the Tecumseh C. T. line.

Will Hayden is circulating a paper to procure names for a Business Men's Association, and it is being very generally signed.

The Senate has passed a bill reducing postage on seeds, bulbs and plants. Now let the House pass the bill as speedily as possible.

It is rumored that Harris & Hiteshu will soon return and occupy the store lately vacated by them with a large stock of dry goods.

Mr. and Mrs. Al. Hyde received the latest surprise. It was last Saturday afternoon and a large number of their relatives participated.

The Baptist Social will be held at the church next week Thursday afternoon and evening, April 5th. Supper will be served from five to eight o'clock.

E. H. Merritt, of Big Rapids, was in town Tuesday. He was en route to Columbus, Ohio, on a business trip and stopped off one train to shake hands with his friends.

Money has been subscribed and a movement started, by which the constitutionality of the local option law will be decided by the supreme court of the state before the first of May.

The township Board of Registration will meet at C. A. Slayton's office next Saturday. All who have moved into the township or become of age since the last town meeting must register. Registration on the village roll will not entitle one to vote at town or general elections.

Mr. James E. Foster departed this life on Tuesday last, after a long and painful illness, at the advanced age of 86 years. The funeral services were held yesterday afternoon, and the remains were taken to Lodi, his former home, for burial. The deceased had been a resident of Tecumseh for the past twenty-five years or more and was one of our most highly respected citizens.

Prof. A. A. Hopkins, of Rochester, New York, who spoke here during the amendment campaign, and the celebrated Silver Lake quartette will probably entertain the citizens of Tecumseh and vicinity, Monday evening, April 9th, with their popular prohibition songs and addresses. Tell your friends to be sure and hear them and watch next week's paper for a more extended notice of the meeting.

Mrs. Mary A. Moody, wife of Arthur Moody, was born in Antrim, Killenny county, Ireland. Died in Tecumseh, Lenawee county, Mich., March 19th, 1888, almost 82 years of age. A loving and faithful daughter, a grandson and his wife mourn her death. The funeral services were held in the Universalist church on Wednesday afternoon, March 21st at 3 o'clock, the pastor, Rev. J. M. Mitchell, officiating.

Go and see Si Perkins.

Town meeting next Monday.

W. J. Kies, of Elkhart, was in town yesterday.

Fred Teachout, of Adrian, was in town Sunday.

B. L. Baxter will return to Battle Creek to-morrow.

Jo. Crosby has been on the sick list during the past week.

The spring term of school will commence next Monday.

Dr. W. C. Burtless, of St. Clair, was in Tecumseh last week.

Miss Bessie Thompson, of Jackson, is visiting friends in town.

C. F. Patterson is convalescing from a severe illness during the past week.

Sam Brangan went to Detroit yesterday morning via. the C. J. & M. R. R.

Richard Caldwell, of Franklin, has obtained a patent on his improved wagon rack.

The Ridgeway extension of the Commercial Telegraph line is about completed.

Jas. Moir and Thos. Wyrill were "surprised" last Monday evening, each at their home.

Mrs. Thompson and her two daughters, of Adrian, are spending a few days with Mr. and Mrs. James Ingersoll.

The death of Mrs. Asa Hubbard, of this village, occurred last Sunday at her residence. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Burt Tate returned from their western trip yesterday afternoon. It is needless to add that it was enjoyed by them to the fullest extent.

Be sure and read the Adrian Weekly Press for March 30th before voting. Sample copy free at every polling place. Don't miss it. Take the paper home with you.

Mr. W. C. Sharp, of Brooklyn, is making arrangements to start a music store here and will probably go in with M. P. Brown. He is a hustler in the music business, and we predict that he will find this a profitable field to work in.

Mrs. N. R. Brown has been spending a few days in the city carefully selecting an assortment of the newest fancy spring millinery goods preparatory for the Easter and early trade. Also has received new spring blocks for shaping and pressing braids.

Services next Sunday at the Universalist church as follows: In the morning at 10:30 an "Easter Sermon," after which "Communion." In the evening at 7 o'clock, an Easter Concert by the Sunday School, entitled, "Child Eric's Pilgrimage." It is the story of a little boy's attempt to find Jesus.

A State Convention of Greenbackers, Knights of Labor, Union Labor Party, Grangers, Patrons of Husbandry and Trades Unions will be held at Mead's hall in Lansing, May 9th, for the purpose of selecting delegates to attend the National Convention to be held at Cincinnati, May 15th, and for the nomination of candidates for the State offices. Also to select a chairman and other members of the State Central committee.

To day is the anniversary of Postmaster Brewer's taking charge of our post office. That his administration has been successful is conceded by all. The service rendered to the public has been entirely satisfactory in every particular and Mr. Brewer enters today on his second year, without even the disgruntled twitter of the most bitter partisan. The courteous clerks should also have a word of praise for their unceasing devotion to duty and the efficiency they have developed.

The above is taken from the Vineland Evening Journal. Miss Libbie Robinson is the principal assistant there now, and with her efficient aid, as a matter of course the new postmaster would succeed.

At a meeting of Republicans held Thursday evening, March 22d, it was resolved to form a Republican club in this township. Committees on securing names and forming a constitution and by-laws were appointed and a meeting called for Tuesday evening, March 27. At this meeting a constitution and by-laws were adopted and the following were elected as officers for the next year: President, John D. Shull; vice president, Dr. Geo. Howell; treasurer, Fred Rosacrans; Secretary, Dan'l. T. Hall; executive committee, the officers above with Geo. S. Tiffany, C. A. Slayton and Wm. DeMott; finance committee, H. W. Stevens, Alex. Turner and S. W. Bordine.

One of the greatest literary hits of the season is the story of "Baby Bunting; or, the Alphabet of Love," by Laura Jean Libbey, which is at present being published in the columns of The New York Family Story Paper. The paper containing the opening chapters of this wonderfully popular romance appeared on the news stands this morning. The tremendous rush for that number by the young ladies of the town shows clearly that the publishers have struck a bonanza. The Family Story Paper is for sale by all newsdealers, or will be sent to any address four months, postage free, for $1.00. Norman L. Munro, Publisher, 238 William Street, New York.

This is good sugar weather.

Si Perkins at the Opera House tomorrow night.

Harry Root went to Dundee last Tuesday on business.

B. J. Coller, of Adrian, has orders for five of his steam yachts.

Dundee will vote on appropriating $3,000 to build a town house this spring.

McClure's grocery store has a new ad. this week which contains much useful information to purchasers.

Miss Eliza Crowell starts to-morrow for Cleveland, O., where she expects to remain during the summer.

Go to election on Monday and vote exactly as you please, and then go to the band concert Tuesday night.

The March number of the Statesman contains a fine portrait of Col. George W. Bain, of Kentucky.

B. L. Baxter, of Battle Creek, spent last Sunday at the old home in Tecumseh. He is in Deerfield this week, looking up business matters.

There will be preaching in the Baptist church, at Macon, next Sunday morning, April 1st, at eleven o'clock, by the Rev. Mr. Moore, Sr.

J. H. Waring, of Paw Paw, was in town last Friday. He expects to trade his farm in Van Buren Co., for a place at South Lyons, Michigan.

Call at the HERALD office and see "The World" type writer. It is the best machine made for the price. Sold in three styles at $10, $12 and $15.

Lon Turner will move to Brighton, Iowa, the first of next month to take charge of a hotel there. We believe he will make a good landlord, but we hate to have him leave town.

E. S. Clarkson, of Detroit, spent last Sunday at the old home in Macon. He is now located in the office of Wilkinson & Post, and is regarded as one of the most promising young attorneys of that city.

C. T. Chapin, of Cadillac, the former owner of the old Raisin Valley Record, paid Tecumseh a flying visit last Monday. He is doing well out there. Cadillac is enjoying a rapid and healthy growth.

The date of the Democratic State Convention has been changed from May 16th to May 10th, so as not to conflict with the Prohibition State Convention. Grand Rapids is the place of meeting.

Frank Swick favors us with a copy of the Kalamazoo Telegraph of the 17th, which is printed on green paper in honor of St. Patrick's Day. The number contains a lengthy account of the St. Patrick's celebration in that city.

James Montague has bought the Novelty stock of W. D. Adams and will conduct the business in the future. Mr. Adams we understand, intends to move to Toledo. Mr. Montague is well qualified to run the business and we wish him the best of success in his new venture.

Samuel C. Sharp, of Benton Harbor, who has been sojourning a few days with Ridgeway and Tecumseh friends favored the HERALD with a pleasant call Monday afternoon. Mr. Sharp left the old home when only 16 years of age and struck out west to seek his fortune.

The question of rapid transit was satisfactorily settled by the editor of the Call yesterday, when he fell the whole length of the stairs in the Upton Block, on going down from his office. The team standing at the foot of the stairs could not be blamed for being startled at that method of locomotion.—Battle Creek Call.

QUAKER, Mich., March 3d., '88.

EDITOR HUDSON POST:—The Clayton Journal boasts of a child in that city that has eight grand parents living, and seems to think that is something remarkable. Well, they had probably not heard from Rollin. Eva Perkins, grand daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Todd, of Rollin, had at the time of her birth fifteen grand parents. At thirteen years of age she still had nine grandparents, and since the death of Mrs. Stephen Perkins a few days ago, has eight grandparents now living. Miss Eva is now in her 14th year. Her four grandparents and her mother's four grandparents are still living.

S. N. WADE.

The Forum is the vehicle for the thought of the foremost writers of both continents on those subjects that are of the gravest concern to progressive men. It was founded two years ago by a company of scholars who had the money required to establish so costly an enterprise and it has fulfilled their expectations. Its circulation has grown until it is now believed to be larger than that of any other unillustrated monthly, and it seems in a fair way to reach most of the educated readers in the land. Every subject of large importance that comes forward is treated in its pages by men who write with authority and with no other purpose than to tell the truth. The March number contains two powerful revenue reform articles from Wm. M. Springer and Wm. R. Morrison. Subscriptions taken at the HERALD office.

THE REPUBLICAN CAUCUS.

Persuant to call, the Republicans met in caucus at the Council Rooms last Thursday evening. Mr. Shull, chairman of the town committee called the caucus to order, and read the mary meetings, passed at the last session of the legislature. On motion, Dr. George Howell was chosen chairman of the meeting, C. A. Slayton, secretary, O. P. Bills and P. C. Snell, inspectors. Mr. Slayton administered the prescribed oath to the Chairman and Inspectors. The following ticket was placed in nomination to be supported at the town meeting on Monday next:

Supervisor—J. D. Shull.
Clerk—C. A. Slayton.
Treasurer—Thos. Wyrill.
Justice—D. T. Hall.
Highway Com.—M. E. Conklin.
Drain Com.—C. H. Mathews.
School Ins.—Dr. Geo. Howell.
Constables—H. W. Stevens, James Elliott, Theo. Wood, Geo. Sanford.
Delegates to the County convention—O. P. Bills, Abner Wilson, A. W. Mills, S. W. Bordine, Web Frazer, D. T. Hall.
Town Committee—J. D. Shull, C. A. Slayton, Thos. Wyrill.

THE PROHIBITION CAUCUS.

The Prohibitionists of Tecumseh held their township caucus last Monday evening at the Council Rooms. M. P. Brown was elected chairman Dr. Steinhoff, Secretary, and James Moir and C. E. Williamson, Inspectors. The oath was administered to the officers and the caucus proceeded at once to nominate a township ticket with the following result:

Supervisor—C. E. Williamson.
Clerk—Dr. B. F. Steinhoff.
Treasurer—Timothy Mills.
Justice—P. W. Adams.
Inspector—M. P. Brown.
Highway Com.—Andrew Wilson.
Drain Com.—John Margeson.
Constables—James Moir, James McKinney, H. J. Sweet, Wm. Kyle.
Delegates to the County Convention—M. P. Brown, B. F. Steinhoff, David Jones, H. L. Stewart, P. W. Adams, C. E. Williamson.
Alternates—A. L. Millis, Sam'l McClure, James McKinney, Andrew Wilson, Chas. Eldridge, Chas. Albaugh.
Town Committee—M. P. Brown, Jas. Moir, E. J. Hollister.

THE DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.

The Democrats of Tecumseh held their caucus yesterday afternoon at the Council Rooms. The meeting was called to order at three o'clock sharp, by Alf. James, chairman of the town committee. David McNair was elected chairman of the caucus, C. F. Field, Secretary, and Fred Wood and Horatio Keyser, were appointed Inspectors. The oath prescribed by the statute was duly administered to the officers. The following township ticket was then placed in nomination.

Supervisor—Alfred James.
Clerk—Joseph H. Smith.
Treasurer—Geo. W. Frazer.
Justice—Chas. Burridge.
Inspector—C. F. Field.
Highway Com.—J. F. N. Bowen.
Drain Com.—John T. Bovee.
Constables—Thos. R. Kyle, E. A. Doke, C. F. Skinner, Jas. H. Aten.
Delegates to County Convention—F. B. Wood, Jehiel Davidson, R. J. W. Bowen, H. B. Root, D. McNair, C. F. Field.
Town Committee—Alf. James, J. H. Smith, G. W. Frazer.

THE GIRL I LEFT BEHIND ME.

The Si Perkins troupe will appear at the Opera House to morrow evening. At their appearance here last season, they gave most unqualified satisfaction and they ought to secure a crowded house to morrow night. Read what some of the newspapers say about the play now on the boards.

"Si Perkins, or; The Girl I Left Behind Me," was given in Kingston last evening by the troupe that appears at the Casino to-morrow. The Kingston Leader pronounces it as one of the best plays ever seen in that city.—Middletown Press.

"Si Perkins, or; The Girl I Left Behind Me," is one of the most amusing of plays. It is chuck full of fun and wit, and kept the audience in a roar the entire evening. Mr. Frank Jones is a show in himself. The other characters were well taken, and all combined to make a good entertainment.—Grand Rapids Eagle.

The play of "Si Perkins, or The Girl I Left Behind Me" was presented at the Opera House Thursday evening to an immense audience. Long before the time for the curtain to rise on the first act, the sale of tickets to the balcony had been stopped and the lower part of the house had filled up rapidly. The company carries a good band and orchestra with them, and their playing is first rate. The play is full of laughable situations, and the play has a plot running through its entire length so that there is connection enough in it to keep an audience interested. Frank Jones, as Si Perkins, and Miss Montague, as Zana, are well up in their parts and their support is good. The play scored a decided success and the audience was happy.—Cleveland News.

Scribner's Magazine for April contains the first paper in their series of illustrated articles on railways. The wide interest manifested in this subject ought to insure them a large sale.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

VILLAGE OF TECUMSEH, MICH.
Council Room, March 13th, 1888, 7 P. M.

Adjourned session. Present entire council except Mr. Kingan.

Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

The Treasurer presented his annual report, which was referred to the finance committee.

The purchasing agent reported sale of oil barrels and old plank amounting to $7.50 with freight receipts and Treasurer's receipt to balance. Accepted and filed.

NEW BUSINESS.

The following bills were presented and referred to finance committee:

M. I. Wilcox Co., $23.52; Whitelock, Bordine & Co., $7.58; Satterthwaite Bros. & Bond $16.11; S. C. Stacy $2.50; E. Ames, election board $2; A. James election board $2; S. Catlin registration board, $2.

On motion, the Recorder was directed to draw an order in favor of A. James for $20, in payment of his services as purchasing agent.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The Finance committee reported favorably upon all of the above claims. Accepted and adopted and orders directed drawn.

Council then adjourned.

FRED. B. WOOD,
Recorder.

VILLAGE OF TECUMSEH.
Council Room, March 12, 1888, 8 P. M.

Called session. All the officers elect having duly qualified since last adjournment the new council convened pursuant to call by President Hesen.

Present, entire council except Mr. Kingan.

President Hesen announced that the committees of last year would serve without change until next regular session.

There being no further business, council then adjourned.

FRED. B. WOOD, Recorder.

TO THE BUSINESS MEN OF TECUMSEH.

In accordance with the proposed plan of organizing a Business Men's Association, a meeting of the business men of Tecumseh, is hereby called to meet at the Council building, Wednesday, April 4th, 1888, at 7:30 p. m., for the purpose of effecting a permanent organization.

BY ORDER OF COM.

FARMERS' UNION

The Farmers Union held its last meeting at Mr. John Boyce's Friday evening, March 23. The attendance was quite good and the recitations excellent. The question, "Is it practicable to dehorn cattle" was freely discussed and the general opinion was that it was not practicable, but it was a custom which the people of this country would have to be educated to to appreciate its merits.

It was decided to hold a picnic at Sand Lake some time in June, the date to be fixed by a committee, and reported. The meeting then adjourned to meet at M. Davidson's, Oct. 19.

EMMA BROWN, Sec.

Card of Thanks.

We beg leave to extend our heartfelt thanks to friends and neighbors for their kindness and care for our loved one during her last illness.

J. W. STITT,
MRS. A. AYLESWORTH

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Lucia Stevens, whose death occurred last week Wednesday, at the age of 64 years and 6 mos., was born in Middlefield, N. Y., September 21st, 1824. She was the daughter of Henry Bowen, and was one of twelve children—six sons and six daughters, of whom seven survive, one of them being a twin sister. She was married to Asahel Stevens in 1850 and was the mother of eight children, seven of whom are still living. After living a number of years in Middlefield and a short time at Janesville, Wis., the family removed to this village, and with the exception of five years residence at Deerfield, in this county, they have remained here. Mrs. Stevens was of a quiet, unassuming disposition, of strong Christian character and fulfilled her maternal duty to a large family with the utmost fidelity. She was a member of the Baptist church, of this village, and was a regular attendant at its devotions, especially the prayer meetings. As the bells slowly toll the hour of service, one familiar form will be missed from its accustomed place, one familiar voice will be heard no more. Let us believe that she is worshipping at a higher shrine.

—It will pay you to call on M. P. Brown at his well known place of business and examine thoroughly the celebrated Chicago Jewel Vapor Stoves for which he is agent. 72,000 are already in use and their economy of fuel, and easy adjustment to all kinds of cooking, makes them a general favorite.

—Farmers, remember when you want a new Plow C. A. Slayton will sell you one for Ten dollars.

Leave orders for land plaster and Agi salt with
C. A. SLAYTON.

—Do not forget that those well known and popular styles, "The White" and The Domestic sewing machines, and also all kinds of needles or supplies are kept for sale at the lowest prices at M. P. Brown's, Art Gallery.

THE OLD WIFE.

By the bed the old man, waiting, sat in vigil sad and tender,
Where his aged wife lay dying and the twilight shadows brown, Slowly from the wall and window chased the sunset's golden splendor,
Going down.

"Is it nigh?" she whispered, waking for her spirit seemed to hover
Last between the next world's sunrise and
[illegible]
And the old man, weak and tearful, trembling as he bent above her,
Answered: "Yes."

"Are the children in?" she asked him. Could he tell her? All the treasures
Of their household lay in silence many years beneath the snow?
But her heart was with them living, back among her toils and pleasures,
Long ago.

And again she called at dew-fall, in the pleasant summer weather,
"Where is little Charley, father? Frank and Robert? Have they come?"
"They are safe," the old man faltered, "all the children are together
Safe at home."

Then he murmured gentle soothings, but his grief grew strong and stronger,
Till it chilled and stilled him as he held and kissed her wrinkled hand.
For her soul far out of hearing could his tendrest words no longer Understand.

There was stillness on the pillow, and the old man listened lonely
Till they led him from the chamber, with the burden on his breast,
For the wife of seventy years, his manhood's early love and only,
Lay at rest.

"Fare-you-well!" he sobbed, "my Sarah; you will meet the babes before me;
'Tis a little while, for neither can the parting long abide,
And you will come and call me soon, I know—
and Heaven will restore me
To your side."

It was even so. The springtime in the steps of winter treading Scarcely shed its orchard blossoms ere the old man closed his eyes,
And they buried him by Sarah, and they had their "diamond wedding
In the skies."

GRANDPA WEST'S STORY.

"So it seems Fred Hayes has finally jilted Fanny Howe," said Grandpa West, one rainy morning, as he stood shaking off the drops from his great coat on our kitchen stove.

"Yes," replied I, as I filled a pan with apples and prepared to cut them, "and more shame to him, too. Brought her clear up to an engagement, and then left town with another girl, and without one word to Fan."

"Shame!" repeated good Grandpa West, with an indignant flash from eyes blue and clear as at 21. "It's a disgrace to any Christian church to let one of its members go on so. Time was when he wouldn't have gone scot free as he has now."

"But what could have been done?" I inquired.

"Done?—He'd have had the full broadside of church discipline on his shoulders fifty years ago. He ought to be dealt with as Harmon Page was, concluded grandpa, meditatively.

"How was that? inquired I, interested at once.

"I wonder if you never heard that story" said he, with a curious glance I understood better afterward. "See here, it's a rainy day and mother won't be expecting me home. Hand over a knife, and I'll help you with your apples and tell that yarn at the same time."

Well pleased with the plan, I took another pan and our fingers flew as grandpa went on with the true and authentic history of Harmon Page.

"You see," he began, "all this happened fifty years ago, and Amityville wasn't then the slow-going, dull little place it is now. It was comparatively new, and was as lively and enterprising as the new places of the West are to-day. There were a good many old aristocratic families, though, and I tell ye they held their heads high. The very meetin' house slips had to be gauged accordin' to the rank of the buyers, and I tell you old Deacon Avery would never have got the scowl out of his forehead if Square Page had happened to have a seat in front of his.

"Deacon Avery had a daughter—a quiet, gentle girl, with a slight, graceful figure and a face—well, you don't see such faces now-days, a clear, fine complexion, with a delicate pink trembling up into her cheeks, when she was spoken to. Her eyes were great liquid wells, changing with every thought, and her hair was a soft chestnut brown, waving about her face in its own wayward way.

"She was a lovely girl, became a professor young, and was always to be seen in the end of the deacon's pew every Sunday, rain or shine. She never had much company, for there was a kind of an unfledged reserve about her that kept the fellows at a distance. [illegible] Square Page began to go with her.

"He was a handsome, high-spirited chap, [illegible] of talk, [illegible] Avery as [illegible] Deacon [illegible] Avery [illegible] Mother [illegible] twenty [illegible] strange that [illegible] by it. He [illegible] chap in the [illegible] habit of taking [illegible] everything in more cases than one, and Virginia was right there handy, while Mercy lived at the top of one of our old-fashioned Connecticut hills, with a dreadful hard road leading to it.

"Whether she knew how much Harmon was taking the other girl wasn't known; some thought not. She didn't get out much except to meetin' that winter, and she had enough of her father's spunk about her not to let on that she cared a button for him, with Virginia Wake at the boomin's.

"There was splendid sleighing that season, the kind we don't have these days, and some of the young folks wanted to have a general sleigh ride. It was put off from time to time, till 'twas finally set for the Thursday night.

"It was the night of the regular weekly prayer-meeting, and after the time of the ride was all settled, Harmon, who was the only professor in the party, tried a little to have it changed. But Virginia Wake declared, with a wicked shake of those jingling curls, that she could say her prayers just as well in a sleigh as she could cooped up in that stupid barn of a meeting house.

"Everybody thought afterward she fixed the ride for that night, to show Mercy Avery the power she had over Harmon Page.

"Well, the party started from Amityville long about 5 o'clock. They were all in a big two horse load, except Virginia and Harmon.

"She had arranged for them to go ahead in his cutter alone, and I'll admit they were a splendid looking couple—he, with his fine eyes and teeth, and she, in a rich crimson hood that set off her dark beauty to perfection.

"Our route—for I was one of the party—lay straight up the hill toward Deacon Avery's. Just as we turned into it, who should we meet but the Deacon and Mercy.

"They were late, for the meeting was also appointed for early candle lighting, but Mercy had probably waited awhile for Harmon, who, for a year back, had taken her to Thursday meetin' as regular as the day came round.

"She sat up, straight and queenly, beside her father as they passed, and seemed not to hear the malicious sally Virginia called out to her.

"We, in the back team, were near enough to catch the scornful glance she threw from those deep eyes, gray as steel that night.

"As for Harmon, he turned white to the lips, and for a mile hardly answered the banter that Virginia kept up. After that he seemed to grow perfectly reckless, laughed and joked louder than any of the rest, and was so careless that he drove on a stone wall, and we, following, were all upset in a heap together, and had hard work to get tied up so as to make our way home toward morning, more dead than alive.

"It was a sorry day for Harmon Page. He was waited upon by a church committee, headed by Deacon Avery, who denounced his whole conduct towards Mercy as unchristian and highly inconsistent in a church member.

"He didn't have much to say for himself and they marched him on the spot. It was pretty down in the mouth, but kept up some hope, till he saw Mercy Avery.

"He had refused to see Virginia Wake, and that night he went up the familiar hill to Deacon Avery's stone house.

"Mercy herself came to the door, calm and self-possessed, as if nothing had happened, and showed him into the sitting-room. There was a steady light in her gray eyes, though, that made Harmon tremble, and, without beating about the bush a bit, he came right to the point, and asked if it all might be forgiven and forgotten, and they become as good friends as before. He worked himself into a passion, cried, and took on like a child, they said.

"But law, it didn't move her a atom. She had the genuine old Avery grit, if she was mild mannered, and she told him that, as long as the church had put him out, he, of course, couldn't in conscience take him back.

"He pleaded and entreated till 10 o'clock at night, a late hour in them days, but it didn't make a mite of difference. She wouldn't overlook what the church had considered a gross breach of faith. He went out a crushed man, and from that time his spirit seemed to leave him utterly."

"And what about Virginia Wake?" I interrupted, unconsciously cutting my fingers in my eager interest.

"Oh, after the girl had done all the mischief possible, public opinion toward her changed mazin' quick, and she left town in a few days, and was never heard from in these parts again."

"And Harmon Page; what became of him?"

"He never got over the shock. He became silent and melancholy, and finally had to be taken to the Retreat. He grew worse, and the sight of a handsome woman with red cheeks and black curls would always throw him into his most violent tantrums. He died in the asylum at last."

"Now, I think that was real mean," said I, wrathfully winding cotton around my bleeding thumb. "If Mercy Avery hadn't turned him off this life might not have ended so sadly. I think she ought to have taken him back."

"Ah, ha!" said Grandpa West, quizzically, "do you mean that?"

"Certainly," said I, with dignity, "why shouldn't I?"

"Oh, nothing," he replied, "only if she had, Harmon Page would have been your grandfather instead of me."

"My grandfather—why then," said I in some confusion, "Mercy Avery must be—"

"Mercy West, your grandmother," said grandpa, chucking me under my chin. "Confess now that all's well that ends well."

"I suppose so," said I, reluctantly.

Perfect.

A certain cheerful old lady has been heard to declare that she was "perfectly warm," though the words came through chattering teeth, and, in the excess of her politeness she has even been known to tell the physician, who had come to prescribe for her, that she was "very well, indeed." Uncle Rastus, in like manner, thought his hearing was good.

"And so this is your birthday, uncle?"

"Yes, sah. I'se seventy-y'ar ole ter day."

"Is your hearing good, Uncle Rastus?"

"Who am dat?"

"I say, is your hearing good?"

"Does I think it am gwine ter rain?"

"No, no, Uncle Rastus. I—want—to know—if your—hearing—is still—good."

"Oh, my h'arin'? Yes, sah, my h'arin' am puffic."

She Appreciated His Words.

When Macbeth ironically asked, "Canst thou minister to a mind diseased?" he little knew that mankind would one day be blessed with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In purifying the blood, this powerful alterative gives tone and strength to every function and faculty of the system.

Now is the time to pay up.

THE peculiar combination of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup enables it to do what no other remedy has ever accomplished, and it is daily curing those who years ago had given up all hopes of being cured.

The reason why Acker's Blood Elixir is warranted, is because it is the best Blood Preparation known. It will positively cure all Blood Diseases, purifies the whole system, and thoroughly builds up the constitution. Remember, we guarantee it. C. A. WRIGHT & CO., Druggists.

ANIMAL CATCHING DEVICE.

With this simple tool one man and a boy 10 years of age can hold and ring the most vicious and largest hog with ease. It can be used for handling hogs for all purposes, and sheep as well. In washing or shearing sheep, put the Catcher loose in the handle, then reach out and catch the sheep without disturbing the flock, always catching by the leg. There is no danger of breaking the leg, the device being pulled out from the handle when on the leg of the animal. On receipt of $1.25 I will send to any address postpaid the Catcher with twitch to hold the nose of the hog to ring. Catcher without the handle for $1.00. Large profits to good agents. Ask your hardware merchant for them.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed, you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness caused by Catarrh that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circular free.

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an alterative, and cures a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with perseverance, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a scrofulous humor on my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my face. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more

Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. Furbush, Haverhill, Mass.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON FOR APRIL 1st, 1888.

THE MARRIAGE FEAST.—MATT. XXII. 1-14.

NOTES.—"And Jesus answered"—Not any immediate question, but the inmost thoughts of those listening to him.——This parable sets forth the relation of the heavenly Father to the Jews and Gentiles. The details of the story give the brilliant coloring. The prophets and John the Baptist gave the first invitation to the feast. Christ and all true followers are giving and urging the final invitations. What the Jews refused the Gentiles are enjoying.——"Other servants."—Corresponding to the apostolic preachers. A chance is given to these stubborn Jews to change their mind and come.——"My dinner."—A noon meal at which the marriage festivities begin. It precedes the marriage ceremony.——"And he sent his armies."—A reference is made here undoubtedly to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans which preceded the formal offer of the Gospel to the Gentiles; though the Gentiles had the offer many years before.——"Not worthy."—Because they refused, and that with hatred, violence and contemptuousness.——"Partings of the highways."—Where two roads in a city meet, there naturally would be a large crowd of people.——"As many."—This implies, with the following, a universal invitation to all who were not first bidden to come.——"Both bad and good."—By their very acceptance of the invitation, and by their presence at the feast, under the king's conditions, their past, however evil it might have been, was wiped out. A new life had begun for those wedding guests.——"Not in a wedding garment."—He might have had it if he had wished it. It was essential to him and fit that he should have it. None could approach the marriage feast without one. It was the garment of true holiness that comes only by faith and those who accept Christ's invitation. It is freely offered to all.——"He was speechless."—He had no excuse. His punishment was severe, and the man admitted his wrong. The awful contrast between the joy of the feast and the darkness of despair was his punishment. The details of it are again the artistic coloring. The man is punished for neglect, that is the lesson. The parable does not pretend to teach how.

INSTRUCTION.—This lesson is all a parable. It is a picture deftly flashed before the minds of the listeners. It is a looking-glass in which each could see himself and start. Appropriate stories, helpful parables narrated by the Christian teacher are demanded by listeners to enchain attention and to clinch a great truth. But let these be true to their purpose. We despise mere story-telling in the pulpit for dramatic effect. Such means should be used, in Christ's way, simply to fix the truth and save souls.

The treatment of the "other servants" by the invited guests is characteristic of some to day. There are those who hear the good word of life and pass it by carelessly. They have no time for pleasures of the soul. "Business! Business" is all their cry. Dollars and cents will become hateful in their eyes some day. They shall perish with a wail on their lips and moan unsaved. God help them!

And some make violent opposition open or secret. They have no excuses. They despise the King and his feast. They mutilate and kill. More there are of this class than we dream of. A pistol brandished in the hand is not their emblem; but their lying tongue and their pestilential and malignant lives are. God shield us from their touch and contamination. Their lot is destruction complete and final.

Then there are those that gladly come, eager for their unlooked for opportunity. They believe the messenger that a feast is prepared for them and that they shall see the King face to face. What a happy lot is theirs! How can any one choose otherwise than to serve in the joy of the Lord?

The fourth class is perhaps the saddest of them all. They are the sneaks who creep into the fold under the guise of holiness, but the King sees that they have not that true heart-righteousness that those must have who are to sit in the King's house. They willingly accept God's pardon for past sins, but refuse to live holy lives. They temporize with life and sin. They throw a sop to Christ and to the Devil. They would unite faith and sin. They would persuade themselves and others that they are Christians, but they know that they have not taken a step to moral union with Christ. Everlasting lamentation for their consummate hypocrisy is not too great a price for them to pay.

The message discloses a great opportunity. The responsibility is cast upon us as soon as the word is delivered. If we fail what can save us? Excuses are the worst means to obtain forgiveness.

To be called is not equivalent to being chosen.

I NEVER saw anything like it. Everywhere I go I hear nothing but praise for Hibbard's Throat and Lung Balsam.

RIDING ON THE RAIL.

Sights Familiar to the Traveler—The Irrepressible Train-Boy.

There is one ministering presence, writes Bob Burdette, that hovers over the wanderer like a guardian spirit, and never abandons him so long as there remains [illegible] hope of a home. Palaces and palaces though we may roam, there is nothing so constant as the train boy. It were folly to talk of abolishing him, for he is almost indispensable. But frequently he needs regulating. I admired a lady whom I saw the other day on a train running out of Indianapolis. The boy threw into her lap, as he did in the laps of all the patient passengers, a bound book, a box of figs, and a rolling pin full of candy. She calmly swept the assortment off upon the floor. On his return trip the indignant boy remonstrated. "Lady," he said, "I didn't bring those things in the car to have them thrown on the floor." "And I," said the lady, sweetly, "didn't bring my lap in the car for a table."

I hold that, under the inter-state law, passengers should be allowed full control of their own laps, and the railway company have no right to use them. A man doesn't pay full fare for the privilege of being used as a sample room of the railway news company. The train boy should know who does and who does not want certain of his wares. Of course he can't know everything, but sometimes he doesn't seem to know anything. Now, in the case of the kiln-dried figs sold on the trains. The boy throws a box of them into every lap on the train. Yet I could tell, on a dark, stormy night, at a distance of three hundred miles, the three men in a train of five hundred passengers who would buy those figs. Of the three, one is blind and easily deceived, the second is drunk and will buy anything, and the third man really buys them to eat, knowing what they are.

Sham Electric Appliances.

Electricity, scientifically employed, is of undoubted value as a curative agent, but the majority of the "electrical belts" and similar appliances are totally worthless. The Electrical Review calls attention to some of these and describes a "galvanic generator," which consists of a small oval frame of a bituminous nature containing a similar shaped but smaller zinc plate ornamented in relief with "lightning flashes." Placed on this is a copper disk of similar shape, without any separating medium whatever between them. The combination is perfectly dry, and is absolutely useless as a "generator" of anything but a vacuum in the pocketbook of the credulous. Other "appliances" are described, and a correspondent of the paper adds that upon the production and advertising of such rubbish $100,000 a year is profitably spent. Yet some of us think it strange that the "medicine man" should be able to impose his antics upon uncivilized negroes. It would seem as if the ancient scarecrow were entitled to the rank of a universal truth, "Populus vult decipi et decipatur," which in this case may be freely translated, "A fool and his money are soon parted."

"Beating" the Plumber.

One of the great sources of income of that interesting tradesmen, the plumber, is the bursting of water pipes through frost. "Britannicus," the London correspondent of the Building Budget, suggests that this plumbing mint of wealth can be drained up by merely threading through every water pipe, be it in iron or lead, a thin gutta-percha pipe. When the frost comes and swells out the water into ice the gutta-percha pipe makes way for the extra bulk. Nothing can be simpler and nothing can be more effective. Of course this does not absolve the architect from the duty of placing the water pipes in such a way that the danger of their freezing be reduced to a minimum.

A Phenomenal Fire.

At Wadsworth, Nev., on the Central Pacific railroad, some three years ago, the ground was set on fire by cinders dropped from engines at the railroad shops, and has been burning ever since. The railroad shops have been removed to the opposite side of the Truckee river. When cattle new to the place get into this burning ground it is stated that they elevate their tails and speedily depart. The old cows of the neighborhood learned long since from sad experience to give this "hell's half acre" a wide berth. The noise made by strange cattle when they get their first baptism of fire can only be compared with the bellowing of the famous bulls of Bashan.

Didn't Look at It.

"Johnnie, when will your sister be down? I'm getting awfully tired of waiting."

"She'll be down in ten minutes, I guess."

"Well, I'm going to time her. I'll go and look at the clock and see how long it will take her."

"You'd better not."

"Why?"

"Dad would be mad if it wasn't running."

"What do you mean, Johnnie?"

"Why, sister would stop a clock by looking at it."

Her Pathetic Song.

A Washington author—a woman—wrote a song on the pathetic order the other day, dedicated it to the lately deceased wife of a prominent official, and then submitted it to Colonel "Bob" Ingersoll, who is a friend of the family and happened to be in town, asking him at the same time whether in his opinion it would prove a success.

"Success?" growled the infidel. "Why not? Songs with coffin attachments always find a ready market."

WILL THE BELLS RESTORE HER?

Pathetic and Curious Story of a Woman in Atlanta.

There is a lady who resides in Atlanta whose mind has been clouded for many years. She lives in obscurity and is seldom seen in public. Recently she has displayed the keenest interest in the new church bell that is to be raised above the Church of the Immaculate Conception. She believes that at the first stroke of the bell her reason will be restored. For many years she resided in Charleston, S.C., within the sound of St. Michael's chimes. More than twenty years ago her reason left her on the account of the death of a young man to whom she was to have been married. She was arrayed in her bridal robes, waiting the coming of the groom, but hours passed and, "he came not," she said. Just as a messenger was dispatched to ascertain the cause of delay the chimes of old St. Michael broke the stillness of the night. Suddenly the face of the waiting bride grew as pallid as the orange blossoms on her brow, and she screamed. "Ah, did you hear what the chimes said? He is dead! dead! dead! He will never come, never! never! never! I hear it as a message from his passing soul." And with these words she fell amid the scene of light and beauty, and believed she was dead. But she recovered, only to find that her strange premonition was verified. The young man, while on his way to his marriage was thrown from his carriage and killed almost instantly. That night her reason snapped, and ever since she has been a heart-broken, demented woman. She has lived here for many years, and she has on several occasions made liberal gifts to charitable associations. She is a wreck of a once beautiful woman, and her manner is refined and even stately. At times she is rational and converses intelligently.

Speaking to her on the subject of her restoration of mind when the new bell resounded she said: "Yes, all you have heard about my faith in the ringing of that bell is true. I believe that the first chime that rings will restore my mind, and the clouds that have rested on my brain so long will disappear and I will be a sane woman. God has revealed this to me. The soul of my dead lover will speak through the tongue on that bell just as it did twenty years ago, and will proclaim to me peace of mind and strength of reason. Yes, ring, ring! ring out the old, ring in the new!" she cried, and in a moment more the cloud was over her mind and she chattered to herself, seeming oblivious of any one's presence.

It is said that the hope she places in her restoration permeates her thoughts day and night, and she is waiting anxiously to hear the first chime of the bell. She walks past the churches early every morning and keeps her eyes riveted on the cross above, and mutters something. Then silently she returns to her home and, with a dim old picture of her dead lover and her roses in hand she prays for an hour or more. This peculiar phase in this case will be watched with great interest by those who believe in the restoration of mind and body through the power of faith.

A Madman at Large!

He is a well-known citizen, and his nearest and dearest friends do not suspect his insanity. How do we happen to know about it? Listen: his appetite is gone, he is low spirited, he don't sleep well, he has night sweats, he is annoyed by a hacking cough. These symptoms are the forerunners of consumption and death, and yet he neglects them. Is it any wonder that we call him a madman? If you are his friend tell him to get a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery without delay. It will cure him if he takes it in time. It will not miraculously create new lungs when the old ones are nearly gone, but it will restore diseased ones to a healthy condition. Tell him about it, and warn him that in his case delay means death.

That tired, debilitated feeling, so peculiar to Spring, indicates depraved blood. Now is the time to prove the beneficial effects of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It cleanses the system, restores physical energy, and infuses new life and vigor into every fibre of the body.

GOOD MORNING, MOTHER, how do you feel this morning? Oh, I am ever so much better. That cough and soreness of my lungs has entirely left me. I got a bottle of Hibbard's Throat and Lung Balsam, and in twenty-four hours I was well.

Smyptoms of Heart Disease

Diseased hearts are as common as diseased lungs, kidneys or stomach, but far less understood. The symptoms are shortness of breath, when sweeping, etc., oppression in the chest, faint, weak or hungry spells, dreaming, pain or tenderness in the side, swelling feet, dropsy, etc. The unnatural circulation of the blood in the lungs, stomach, kidneys, liver and brain causes other symptoms. The only reliable remedy for the heart yet discovered is Dr. Miles' New Cure. Try it and be convinced. Sold by Baker & Hall.

Many People refuse to take Cod

Liver Oil on account of its unpleasant taste. This difficulty has been overcome in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. It being as palatable as milk, and the most valuable remedy known for the treatment of Consumption, Scrofula and Bronchitis. Physicians report our little patients take it with pleasure. Try Scott's Emulsion and be convinced.

Now [illegible] me to see [illegible]

The origin of blue-tinted paper came about by a mere slip of the hand. The wife of William East, an English paper-maker, accidently let a blue bag fall into one of the vats of pulp. The workmen were astonished when they saw the peculiar color of the paper, while Mr. East was highly [illegible] grave pecuniary loss. His wife was so much frightened that she would not confess her agency in the matter. After storing the damaged paper for four years, Mr. East sent it to his agent at London, with instructions to sell it for what it would bring. The paper was accepted as a "proposed novelty," and was disposed of at quite an advance over the market price. Mr. East was astonished at receiving an order from his agent for another large invoice of this paper. He was without the secret, and found himself in a dilemma. Upon mentioning it to his wife, she told him about the accident. He kept the secret, and the demand for the novel tint far exceeded his ability to supply it.

Itch, mange, and scratches of every kind on human or animals cured in 30 minutes by Woolford's Sanitary Lotion. This never fails. Sold by Baker & Hall, Druggists, Tecumseh Mich.

My son has been afflicted with nasal catarrh since quite young. I was induced to try Ely's Cream Balm, and before he had used one bottle that disagreeable catarrhal smell had all left him. He appears as well as anyone. It is the best catarrh remedy in the market.—J. C. Olmstead, Arcola, Ill.

Mr. A. Nichols suffered from catarrh for years. He purchased a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm of us. He is now almost cured, and says you cannot recommend it too highly.—Evers Bros., Druggists, Independence, Iowa.

The Latest Tornado

The surprising manner in which the country is being swept by the great discovery of Dr. Miles for curing the many diseases that originate in the nerves is astonishing all who know the facts. The Restorative Nervine a brain and nerve food, sold by Baker & Hall cures weakness, want of appetite, exhaustion, debility from overwork, care, worry and dissipation. It takes the place of stimulates, opiates, chloral, etc., and cures all nervous troubles. It contains no morphine, opium or dangerous drugs.

What are Suppositories?

A. G. Rose, from New London, Penn., writes: Send me two boxes of your Kemp's Pile Suppositories by mail. Our druggist is out. They are for a friend. I tried everything without help, but the Suppositories cured me.

The treatment is new and within reach of all, and would advise the affected to give them a trial. For sale in Tecumseh by Baker & Hall, at 50c per box.

GOOD EVENING, MISS JENNIE; I am very much pleased at seeing you here. You sang beautifully. I understood yesterday that you could take no part in the exercises on account of a severe cold. Well, I did not expect to, but mama got me a bottle of Hibbard's Throat and Lung Balsam, and it helped me at once. That is so; I hear it spoken of in great praise.

LETTER FROM CHICAGO

CHICAGO, MARCH 19th, 1888

DEAR HERALD.—Another fortnight has gone by and still W. B. Tascott demonstrates his clever ability to avoid capture, and as the reward now amounts to $10,000 an army of sleuths are on his track, and it seems impossible that he can evade the minions of the law much longer. If he had used his talents to earn an honest livelihood instead of robbing and murdering in time he might well earn nine dollars a week as a clerk in a dry goods store, and as a reward for fidelity, be fined every time he happened to be five minutes late in arriving at the store in the morning.

The above remarks may lead some readers to infer that I condone Tascott's horrible crime, and I can assure them that I do not, for I abhor the very thought that human beings are capable of such terrible deeds. Yet, seeing so much of the life of the labor ing classes, knowing how hard their battle for life is, and is growing, with trusts, pools and other iniquitous combinations constantly tightening their grip on our meager earnings, it is no wonder that there is so much crime. The wonder is that crime does not increase more rapidly. Nearly every commodity under the sun is controlled by a trust or pool, and "to pay dividends on fictitious stock, consumers are squelched until forbearance ceases to be a virtue. One example will show what a trust can do. A few weeks ago I bought a light of glass, first quality, that cost me 15 cents. Last week I went to buy another of the same size and had to pay thirty-eight cents for an inferior quality of glass. My remonstrance was of no avail, as the National Window Glass Association had fixed a new tariff, and the trust controls every sheet of glass sold in Chicago. Is it about time that the government investigates and destroys the octopus that seems likely to suck the life blood of the consumers?

A goodly share of the population of our large cities is made up of country people. Boys read in story papers and cheap literature about farm boys and village lads who tire of the farm and village life and go to the city to become wealthy and famous. A large majority of these boys are doomed to disappointment, and find the drudgery worse than that they left behind them. He has to be an exceptionally bright clerk who can get $15 per week. More of them get but $9, and when a man tries to support a family on $15 a week in a large city he has no easy task. High rents, costly provision, trust cool prices, carfares and the thousand and one leaks in each pocket keeps the head of the family in such a strained mental condition that his life becomes a burden. Boys who have comfortable homes and fair wages at home had better keep away from the cities, unless they have double assurance that their talents are above the average, when they can not get too soon where talent is rewarded nearly as it deserves.

At the theatres this week some fine attractions are presented. Haggard's grand "She" is drawing at the Chicago Opera House. The lovely and oft divorced Lillian Russell, and Duff's Comic Opera Co., are delighting the masses at the Grand. John Jack is giving 'Falstaff' in Shakspeare's Henry IV., at the Columbia. Clara Morris is at the Academy of Music, and the other theatres have strong attractions. Mrs. Langtry's fiasco at McVicker's was followed by the failure of Mrs. Jas. Brown Potter to please the critics and the public. Last Sunday's papers scored the little woman terribly, and I guess she deserved it. Her interviews with reporters was enough to cut her stage life short.

The north side cable cars are not running yet, and Baron Yerkes seems inclined to ignore the west siders, and not accept the terms of the council for the west side cable road franchise.

Chicago has been enjoying an epidemic of suicide for a week or so, many people robbing the fool-killer of his legitimate work. Sports are much exercised by the Sullivan-Mitchell controversy, and one grows tired of hearing the brutes discussed. While the Frenchmen had them near Paris, they should have chucked them into the river. Then they could have proved them in Seine, and put them in an asylum. See?

GLANDERS.

A Terrible Disease of Which Men Should Beware.

This disease, known also as farcy, prevails among horses, asses and mules. It is highly contagious. It is characterized by a swelling and suppuration of the glands, inflammation tending to suppuration, of the mucous membrane of the respiratory organs, pains in the joints, and great prostration.

There is no evidence that it ever originates in man; it seems, in every human case, to have been communicated from a diseased animal.

It is believed that it is never communicated by diseased emanations diffused in the air. This in part accounts for the fact that it is comparatively rare among men, while, it is frequent among horses, and while, it is frequent, among horses, and has a strong tendency to spread. Horses are very subject to nasal discharges and as the morbid discharges from the nostrils and lungs are profuse, they are thus easily inoculated. It is true, however, that men as readily as susceptible to the disease as are animals, but while it is thus contagious to human beings it is seldom fatal.

In most cases the affected person has taken it by inoculation, directly matter has come in contact with a wound, a scratch, a raw surface, or a chapped hand. The poison then enters from three to eighteen days, sometimes but several weeks. The wound may even have wholly healed, but its effect, sooner or later, becomes manifest, and it fatally ends. The glands in the groin and the whole part become swollen, then follow general abscesses, and ulcerating cavities, but neither men nor horses die the most common of inflammations and ulcerates, as does also that of the mucous membrane, lungs and eyes. There follow a severe cough and profuse expectoration.

In the early stages of the disease, and also when the disease is of a milder type, it is difficult to determine its nature. It may be confounded with rheumatism, typhoid fever, or some other form of blood poisoning. The patient's relation to a horse affected with the disease is an important fact in the determination.

We have said that the mortality in man is very great. Yet if the symptoms develop slowly and are less severe, and the disease assumes a chronic form, one-half of the patients may recover.

Of course, the attending physician must determine the treatment, which should be of a supporting, stimulating and soothing character. All who have anything to do with the patient should wear rubber gloves, and be very careful of any scratch on the face.

PRINCE GHIKA'S POKER CHIP.

He Tries to Pass It for a Sovereign and Narrowly Escapes Arrest.

Prince Ghika, the Roumanian minister to London, has just had a sad and humiliating adventure. He went into a shop a few days ago, bought some trifling object, and offered in payment what is supposed to be a sovereign but what the less near-sighted shopkeeper promptly found to be a most clumsy imitation of the coin. He was not known, and his protestations of innocence were heard in doubt. The shopkeeper would not believe he was the minister of any country, and would have had him lugged off to jail as a forger but not the Prince confessed that what he had tendered in payment was a poker chip made in imitation of sovereigns. His Highness produced several which he had neglected to cash at a recent game. Prince Ghika will probably not again play with such dangerous chips, but either give up the game or more probably, stick to the common bone or ivory markers.

Female Sleeping-Car Conductors.

Said Mr. Tom Ambrose, an old sleeping-car conductor: "There is no reason why women should not be employed as conductors on sleeping cars. Women can do all the work required equally as well as men, and I am not sure but that they can do it better. A very large percentage of sleeping car passengers are ladies, and for that reason it comes within the scope of employment for ladies. For one, I would be glad to see one of the big companies try the experiment. That it would be satisfactory, both to the companies and the public there is little doubt. It would give employment to thousands of women, and the men they would displace could hustle around and find something else to do."

Getting Along Rapidly.

A father whose young son was studying French asked him one day: "Getting along pretty well in your French, Tommy?"

"Oh, yes, papa. I think I could make myself understood quite well if I were in Paris."

"Ah, indeed; well now, for instance, if you were in Paris, and wanted to call a cab, what would you say?"

Tommy thrust his hand into the air, and snapping his fingers sharply, said: "Like this. 'Si! Si!'"

Married to Seven Husbands.

Mrs. John Gruelen, who resides near Rockford, Pa., a daughter of the late Daniel Heinsohn, a prominent citizen, died last week, in the 40th year of her age. Strange to say, in her short life Mrs. Gruelen had been married seven times. At the age of 16 she married an old man, from whom she soon separated. Her second venture was equally successful. The next four marriages were happy enough, but the husbands died. The seventh husband survives.

Not to His Liking.

A tramp knocked at the back door and the cook answered the summons.

"My good woman," he pleaded, "will you be so kind as to give me something to eat?"

The cook replied by whistling for the dog.

"Don't trouble yourself, I beg," he interrupted with courtly grace. "I don't like sausage in any form. Good morning."

Good, Stout Material.

"Did I understand you to say, Mrs. Kendricks," inquired Dumley, who was trying the duck, "that this is a canvass back?"

"Yes, returned the landlady, why?"

"I was only going to remark that there is nothing of the shoddy about the material."

The Modern Servant.

Lady of the house (to her servant)—You tell me that you are going to quit my service, and you know that I have done almost all your work?

Servant—Yes; but ye don't come to suit me.

The Reporter or the Preacher.

A reporter in noticing the death of a venerable man of God, used among other words, the following: "Peace to his ashes." This seems to imply that the good man went to the wrong place.

Five minute speeches on the question, "What shall the farmer do to protect himself from monopoly?"

Led by C. W. Luce. One-half hour will be devoted to the question after which maple sugar will be served to the company.

Owing to the fact that only a small number were present at the meeting at Mr. Poucher's the arrangements for this festival necessarily devolved upon a very few. They request every lady to bring saucers, spoons, and biscuit.

The Evening News of last Saturday contains the following dispatch:

ALBION, Mich., March 17.—The Gale plow company has thus far received over 100 bids from towns and cities in this and neighboring states; and still they are coming in, while Albion resembles a winter resort from the number of visiting delegations to look over the works. The prime motive for moving the works is not on account of any ill-feeling existing between the company and city, but because of its poor shipping facilities. The company says that it can find locations where by cheapness in fuel and reductions in cost of raw material they can thereby save over $8,000 per annum. The buildings it is proposed to erect will be 60x640, 60x340, 80x350, 70x40; all to cost $50,000. Not less than 400 men will be employed the first year, and the new works will be completed July 1. It will be a bonanza for the town that captures the plant. At present, while Albion has the best show, Adrian and Toledo are the most favored outside points; but a decision in the matter will not be made before April 1. The members of the company are very reticent and decline to say anything as to what the ultimate decision will be. However, it lies between three towns—Albion, Adrian and Toledo—almost to a dead certainty.

ESTATE OF ERASTUS N. NICHOLS.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian on Tuesday the 27th day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Erastus N. Nichols, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Lucius Lilley executor of the last will and testament and upon the estate of said deceased, alleging that the funeral expenses and debts of said deceased, and the expenses of administration thus far incurred, and all legacies, except residuary legacies have been fully paid and that he is now ready to close said estate and to render his final account, which he prays may be allowed, the residue of said estate assigned to the parties entitled thereto, and that he may be discharged and his bond cancelled.

It is ordered, That Monday, the 23rd day of April next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Mrs. Eliza Montgomery left Saturday for a weeks visit with friends in Detroit and Canada.

Mrs. Morris House has returned from visiting her daughter, Mrs. Jas. Clark in Tecumseh.

Joseph Henderson is on a visit to his children in Racine, Wis.

Mrs. Geo A. Kies has returned to her home in Elkhart.

Several young gentlemen attended the theatre at Tecumseh Friday evening.

E. S. Tate and wife of Tecumseh, spent Sunday at her father's, Wm. C. Rogers.

David Hamilton of Detroit, was here Monday.

Mrs. Smith, wife of Prof. A. G. Smith, is visiting her old friends here.

Robt Reddick and George Rogers are in Bowling Green, Ohio, working for Ed. Semark, who has a contract for a building there.

W. J. Kies of Elkhart, Ind., visited his people here the last of the week.

Ed. A. Clark returned home Friday last.

Blanche South visited friends in Detroit last week, returning home Monday.

Andrew McDermott has purchased the property owned by John Ed. McCollum. He has rented the house to Prof Wilt C. Hopkins for one year. He intends to build this season on the lot facing Mill street.

Prof Hopkins' family came Tuesday and they will soon be settled in their new home.

Alvah McNeil returned to his home in Grass Lake, Friday of last week.

Nathaniel H. Wells visited friends here the last of the week.

Alonzo Clark went to Chicago Saturday to look after his interests there.

Bush & Walkron began Tuesday to move their stock of groceries to Semark's building and are now nearly settled. They will have one of the neatest stores in the county.

Mrs. C. S. Hazelton, mother of Mrs. James McDermott, arrived from Missouri, Friday, for a visit at her old home.

Clint. C. Rowland has been taking a few day's lay off to recuperate, as he has not been feeling well for a long time.

Bell Hogan and Minnie McAdam have returned to the Normal at Ypsilanti.

Oscar Bivens of Manchester, was shaking hands with old friends here Tuesday.

E. G. Cook of Tecumseh, was on our streets Wednesday.

Chas. T. Clark visited Tecumseh, Wednesday.

J. C. McAdam and wife, of Cadillac, are visiting his relatives here.

Mrs. John T. Clark and children returned Tuesday to their home at Claireview.

The Easter Services at the different churches Sunday, were well attended and were very pleasant. At the M. E. church, instead of regular morning service, it was devoted to the children. Union service in the evening was at the Congregational church. The Episcopal church was very tastefully trimmed. The choir rendered some choice music and both morning and evening the church was crowded. The Rector G. E. Peters, delivered two fine sermons appropriate to the day.

Sunday morning there will be adult Baptisms at the Episcopal church. In the evening Bishop Harris will preach and administer the rite of confirmation.

Dayid Goodrich left Monday for Flint, where he is to work for the Michigan Hedge Company.

Election passed off very quietly Mondays With the exception of Treasurer, the entire Democratic ticket was elected. We give the officers elect, with majorities:

Supervisor—Wesley B. Keyser, 8.
Town Clerk—John B. McAdam, 14
Treasurer—Oscola A. Sinclair, 23.
Justice of the Peace (full term), Solomon Brown, 104.
Com. of Highways—Silvanus Howell, 22.
School Inspector—Mrs Frances D. Rector, 45.
Drain Com.—David G. Kuder, 22.
Constables—Dow Draper, 28; Patrick Hughes, 33; Alexander C. Brown, 19; Joseph F. Cummins, 22.

Brown, for Justice, was on both tickets.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

George Pocklington has been on the sick list for the past few days.

Samuel Rappleye went to Dundee Monday, returning Tuesday.

Clark, eldest son of N. C. Miller, was kicked by a horse in the forehead, Saturday. He was turning the horses out of the stable and hit the animal with the halter, when it kicked him. It was a glancing blow and that saved him from being killed on the spot.

The base ball association will open the season with a picked-up game on Saturday afternoon. Let there be a grand rally.

A brand new girl at the home of Hon. G. P. Waring. The little one arrived Wednesday morning. Mr. W. can be found at his place of business, where he will receive all compliments. We extend ours.

Weddie Bush, who has been spending several weeks in the west with his parents, visited with his grandmother, Mrs. Hall, Sunday. He is on his way home to Brooklyn, N. Y., and says the west is good enough for him.

We are informed that the cards are out for the marriage of Miss Vina Underwood to Mr. Geo. W. Winship, at the home of the bride's parents, next Wednesday afternoon, at 6 o'clock.

The walk from the Waring block to Mrs. Coats' residence, was completed Tuesday.

Several changes are being made in the village this week. Jesse Potter moves into his recently purchased house on North street, J. B. Smith will occupy the place owned by Mrs. D. W. Loree, A. J. Sutton will move into the Mary Arner house, and Samuel Barlow will take possession of his new home on South street.

Horace Smith is the first person in our town to plow this spring. He began Tuesday.

Joseph Osborn, wife and daughter, Hattie, returned Saturday from a three weeks' visit with his brother, William, of Milwaukee, Wis.

The attendance at the sugar and pancake festival, last Friday evening, was not as large as usual. The society will hold their next meeting at the home of Mrs. Sarah Rappleye, next week Friday evening, when a short literary and musical program will be carried out. Mrs. R. extends a cordial invitation to every body to be present.

W. J. Helm will keep the corners right side up the coming year.

It is quite evident that the six young ladies from Tecumseh and Clinton who stopped with Mrs. S. P. Smith during the institute, are none of your drones, but intend to enjoy all there is of life while it is to be had.

There was a very large attendance at the institute last week and a profitable and interesting time spent. Supts. Walker and Tripp had charge of the examinations. Prof. Hathaway, of the Valley seminary, read a paper on teaching physiology; Dr. Loree gave a reading on the same subject. There was a goodly number of the village people present during the entire session. Thirty two candidates for examination were present.

The spring contest for township offices passed off very quietly, but with the usual amount of interest and strife and hard work by each party. Following is the result:

Supervisor—Coonrod L. Lowe.
Clerk—Frank J. Temple.
Treasurer—Laban A. Babcock.
Justice—Morgan M. Florence
School Inspector—John Van Vleet.
Highway Com.—John Gibson.
Constables—Lavern Ouisterhout, W. J. Helm, Edward Millyard, Charles Covell.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

H. E. Wilson has purchased a nice horse of Hugo Smith, and hereafter will not take anyone's dust.

Bert Holdridge and Dexter Still have finished their labor of holding down the mill property. They report things o. k. when they left.

If you want to hear Thede Watson swear, just ask him if George has got back.

Stephen Gay made a trip to North Morenci over Sunday.

At the present writing L. Kelley is on the sick list.

Emma Miller spent a portion of the past week at H. H. Osgood's.

E. C. Lossing returned to Ypsilanti last Monday morning, after a short visit with his parents.

Lizzie Anderson returned to Ann Arbor Monday, after a short but pleasant visit with her sister, Mrs. J. Ash.

Bennie Gillis had the misfortune to dislocate his elbow while at play one day last week. Dr. Begel administered chloroform and replaced the same. This, however will not materially hurt him for fighting.

THE GREATEST DISCOVERY

Of the nineteenth century, can truly be said of Papillon (extract of flax) Skin Cure. Thousands testify to its wonderful curative powers in seemingly hopeless cases of Eczema, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas and every kind of skin disease. Mr. O. P. Algier, of Hartford, Ohio, tried everything he heard of or saw recommended and suffered five years with Eczema until he found Papillon Skin Cure, which cured him. Large bottles only $1.00.

Now is the time to subscribe.

POLITICAL PULL.

Is a rather uncertain thing to depend upon as a basis for obtaining the necessaries of life. With the frequent changes of party somebody is sure to get left, so that on the whole any man of brains and ability is really fortunate if, by missing a fat public job, he is compelled to take up some such business as an agency for Dr. Foote's "Plain Home talk," which is sure to be a good paying business as long as he will devote himself to it. A really popular medical book such as "Plain Home Talk" sells at all times and in all places, and often the best ground for an agency is that which has already been plowed over once or twice by an agent. There is room for all who will apply to the Murray Hill Publishing Co., 129 East 28th St., N. Y. and "first come, first served."

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

The New Board of Supervisors will consist of 14 Republicans and 12 Democrats. Below are the names and politics of the incoming Board:

CATARRH.—Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup is one of the finest laxatives in the world, moving the bowels effectively as well as mildly, without pain, griping or weakness.

HABITUAL constipation can be entirely cured by the use of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup, after all other remedies have failed.

Great Scott! what are we coming to? In New York the policemen are reprimanded for chewing gum.

Mother, do you know anything of that Balsam everybody is talking so much about? Do you refer to Hibbard's Throat and Lung Balsam? Yes, that's what I mean. Well, I believe it is the best medicine in the world for a cough, cold or sore lungs, and is so pleasant to take. Your father took a severe cold day before yesterday, and is well to-day.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

The capital city is again in mourning. The sable emblems may be seen on all the public buildings for the late Chief Justice of the United States.

Neither House of Congress was in session on Wednesday in consequence of the Waite obsequies, which were held at the Capitol. The hall of the House of Representatives was chosen for the funeral ceremonies, it being the largest and therefore the most suitable for such a service.

Small folding chairs were sandwiched between the fixed furniture of the chamber wherever room could be found or made, and rows of chairs were placed in the front and rear of the chamber where usually there is an open area. The floor was made to accommodate 600 more people than the 332 who have seats there by election. The Congressmen modestly retired to the rear of the hall, alloting the front to the guests.

The President and Cabinet occupied seats on the floor of the chamber near the casket, which bore as its only decoration the wreath sent by the President and Mrs. Cleveland. The diplomatic gallery was crowded by the foreign legations in their brilliant costumes, and all the galleries—private, reserved and public, were filled to their utmost capacity.

While the obsequies were imposing, they were made as simple as possible, by special request from the family. The remains were taken to Toledo, O. by special train, accompanied by the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court and by a Congressional committee. The Senate passed a bill early this week appropriating $5000 to pay the funeral expenses.

The Woman's International Council now in progress here, is strictly a cold water convention, so far. Since Sunday last, when it opened, the rain has not ceased to fall. Men might think this holding a convention under difficulties, but the women are too much enthused apparently to know there is anything wrong with the weather. They arm themselves with gossamers rubbers and umbrellas, and tramp through night rains as well as dag rains to Albaugh's opera house, where the conference is being held.

This Congress of women is of more importance than is generally realized by the people throughout the country and the organizations to be perfected as the result of it promise to be of historical interest. The wide scope of topics under discussion gives unusual interest to the proceedings. If the crusade had but one end in view—the improvement of their political condition—many representative women from foreign countries who are present would not be here. But nothing that pertains to women is foreign to this conference. The subject of philanthropies, including prison reform, hospital work, work among the Indians the temperance question, the consideration of women in the professions and industries, and such topics as social purity and woman's legal condition have drawn to this council the workers in the fields suggested, and have given a certain representative character to it.

This is by far the most important gathering of women that has ever been, but I am sorry for woman's own sake to notice in this international assembly of women, cropping out on all occasions, a certain little feminine weakness which they are prone to betray whenever and wherever women congregate. I allude to that disposition among even the best of women workers to resolve themselves into a mutual admiration society, and to laud and compliment and flatter each other until they render themselves ridiculous. Miss Frances Willard, for instance, the president of the W. C. T. U., has received enough fulsome, direct laudation, during this convention to have completely addled her brain had she been a woman of less sense and balance than she is, and as all know Miss Willard's good wine needs no bush.

The River and Harbor bill has at last been completed and was reported to the House on Thursday. It aggregates $19,432,783, and is the largest bill of the kind ever introduced. The appropriation for the Mississippi is $3,385,000, the Missouri, $925,000, and the Ohio, $615,000.

Mr. Randall's tariff bill will not be reported to the House by the Ways and Means committee, it is said, for the reason that it is antagonistic to the Mills bill. It is thought that the Democrats can, by uniting, pass a tariff bill; otherwise they cannot. Mr. Randall is said to have a presidential bee in his bonnet, and, knowing to what extent the President's message was repudiated by the protection Democrats of the south, went to work and prepared a tariff bill more in harmony with the advocates of internal revenue.

DARING AND SUFFERING.

A History of the Andrews Railroad Raid into Georgia in 1862.

The Most Heroic and Tragic Episode of the Civil War.

Embracing a Full and Accurate Account of the Secret Journey to the Heart of the Confederacy, the Capture of a Railway Train in a Confederate Camp, the Terrible Chase That Followed, and the Subsequent Fortunes of the Leader and His Party.

The expedition, up the daring of its inception, had the swiftness of a romance; while in the magnitude and overwhelming results it sought and was likely to obtain it was absolutely sublime.—JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL HOLT'S OFFICIAL REPORT.

It was all the deepest laid scheme, and on the grandest scale, that ever emanated from the brains of any number of Yankees combined.—THE SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY (ATLANTA, GA.), April 15, 1862.

Despite its tragic termination, it shows what a handful of brave men could undertake in America.—COUNT DE PARIS (HISTORY OF THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA, vol. 2, p. 15).

By WILLIAM PITTENGER,
A MEMBER OF THE EXPEDITION.

In such an attack, the element of time and exact planning of every man's work so that there is no confusion and hesitation, are of vital importance. We arranged with the utmost care. Capt. Fry was to begin the movement, for he was the chief, and we gave him the post of honor. I was to stand by and help him with the jailer and the watchman. Thoer, if the latter was on hand, as he usually was, probably I was given this place from the correct view that with my poor eyes I would be of more service in a scuffle in the hall than in the darkness outside. Then Bufinton, who was as agile as a cat, was to scale the fence and unlock for nothing else, to open all the doors above. There were three, and the fitting of keys from the bunch under such excitement was likely to make his task some time. I think no one of us felt that Bufinton had a desirable office. But it was decided to have all the prisoners released if only to distract the pursuit. All the others were arranged into two bands with leaders, to go down the stairway at the proper time and break out on the guards at the front and rear doors simultaneously. Their quickness, courage and desperation were to be tried against loaded muskets after the alarm, and the issue left to the God of battles.

We had also chosen our companies and routes. We were to travel in pairs and in every direction. Capt. Fry was to be my partner, and all the rest considered that I was fortunate, for he would be at home in the Cumberland mountains, toward which we were to journey. The intended course was marked out for each couple and everything done to forward the movement on which we believed depended our last chance of escaping the gallows. We did not forget to make most earnest supplications in prayer, and to vow, in the old time manner, that we would render faithful service to the Lord of Hosts if he would aid us in this great emergency.

It was afternoon when we received the intelligence which decided our action and we could not very well be ready to start that day. So the work was set for the following afternoon. We patched our shoes as well as we could, and made cloth moccasins to protect our feet, for many shoes were worn out. We gave messages to each other beginning with the form, "If you get out and I do not"—for we could not tell who would be the fortunate ones in the effort, or how many might fail. We had a strong conviction of success, but whether seven guards would allow their muskets to be taken without using bullet or bayonet against some of their assailants with fatal effect, seemed more than doubtful! I have made ready for battle more than once, but never had so deep and solemn a realization of the uncertainty of the issue as on this occasion.

CHAPTER XXV

THE ATTEMPT.

The last night that we ever spent together was a very quiet one. We sung but little—only the usual number of hymns in our worship. But we talked late and thoughtfully. We were never all to meet again in this world, and the shadow of the separation was already upon us.

The next day was long and tedious. All our usual exercises had lost their zest, and we could do little but discuss in low tones the coming effort. We would not risk an attack in the morning, for that would have given our enemies all day to search for us. It was far better to wait for evening, even if the day seemed well nigh endless. Slowly the sun rose up, reached the meridian and disappeared behind the jail. We watched the shadow slowly moving up the hill opposite our window till it had well nigh reached the line on the column that usually marked our supper time. The hour was come! We shook hands with a strong, lingering clasp, for we knew not how many of us might be cold in death before the stars came out. Capt. Fry, who was tender hearted as a child, wept at the parting. He had two coats, and has locked mine date use for one only, handed the other to me. It was a wonderful boon, for I was nearly destitute of clothing. Everything that we felt ought to be taken we secured about us, so as not to be in the way of the coming struggle. We still had on hand a lot of books belonging to Rev. George Mc Donald, who had sent them in not long before. We had not dared to return them for fear of arousing suspicion, and I carefully piled them in the corner and wrote upon a note thanking him for the use of them.

At length the noise of shuffling feet and the voices of the colored women who carried in our provision was heard in the hall—a sound always welcome, for we were hungry enough to make the coming of our miserable dinner a great event. The door was unlocked—only one was kept fastened in the daytime now—our food was handed in and the door locked as usual, while the company moved on to give rations to the other prisoners.

Again we heard the shuffling feet in the hall as the waiters returned. For a moment I felt a sharp, knifelike pang shoot to my heart. So keen was it that I thought for a moment that my physical strength was about to fail in this time of sore need—something that had never happened or even been feared before, for always in the presence of danger I had possessed more than usual power. But in an instant it passed away, and I looked about to see if all were at their post. A glance was enough to show that there would be no flinching. The men looked pale, but their teeth were firmly set, and they were leaning slightly forward like a horse straining on the bridle. Itore strike even too soon. As for Capt. Fry, whom I had seen weeping a few minutes before, he was perfectly calm and his face wore a pleasant smile.

As the jailer unlocked and opened the door for the bread pails to be passed out, Fry stepped forward in such a manner that it could not be closed, and spoke very quietly as if it were the most natural thing in the world:

"A pleasant evening, Mr. Turner."

We had no thought of hurting Turner if it could possibly be avoided, but hoped to frighten him into supine silence and giving up the keys without any alarm.

"Yes, rather pleasant," responded he, in a dazed and bewildered manner. He could not understand what Fry had come out there for.

The action of the next few moments was so quick and under such a fever of excitement that accounts of both words and deeds vary widely. I have reconciled them as far as I can, not always using my own recollections when the preponderance of evidence is strongly against me.

"We are going to take a little walk this evening—we are going out," continued Fry, standing close to him, and looking in his eye to see the first signs of a motion. I was by his side, very watchful. There was no fear of our being given by the colored women. They were frightened nearly white, for all our friends, and had enough of them around them to remain silent.

Turner seemed undecided. "How about the guards?" he said in a feeble tone. We were nearly all in the entry now, for there had been a slow, almost unconscious edging forward, and half a dozen low, quick voices answered, "We'll attend to the guard, Mr. Turner."

"Well, you can go then," he said, trembling, while his face seemed to grow ashy white, for our looks were not pleasant.

"Well, give us the keys, then, and you'll not be hurt," said Fry, while Bufinton reached out his hand to take them.

The action seemed to rouse Turner as an electric spark. "You can't have them," he said, and then sprang back, and opened his mouth in the cry, "Guards!"—when my hand closed over his mouth and stifled the incipient alarm. It was scarcely heard out in a moment the three of us were upon him. Fry had clasped him round the body, and arms in no gentle embrace, Bufinton had wrested away his keys, and was off like a shot and unlocked the doors of the department upon it, while my hand had effectually stopped all noise. He bit my finger with all his might, but the teeth were not sharp enough to do any serious injury, and the other hand was pulled down stairs.

Bufinton unlocked all the doors as he came to the last one, in which were locked four Union soldiers and the civilian spy. Not one in the other rooms dared come forth! But the deserter was thought anxious. He encouraged Bufinton saying, "Don't hurry, it will come in a moment." Finally it yielded, and the poor fellow flung himself out like a shot from a cannon and was soon in the front of the flight, but the four others remained inside.

One of the points about which there is a little difference of opinion among us is whether the attack on the guard below was not a few seconds too quick—a most natural error under the circumstances. If all the doors could have been first unlocked, and all who were willing to go have been ready, the jailer bound and gagged, and the whole number, led by those who had been appointed for the work, had burst upon the guard together, it is possible that the victory would have been more decisive and the number of escapes larger. But Knight thought, as he was gliding cautiously down the stairway, that there was a movement in the group of guards by the front gate indicating alarm. In this case the attack could not be delayed, and it was made with surpassing boldness and success.

Porter and Bensinger led at the back door. The former grabbed the gun of a guard that stood near, and jerked so hard that the guard, suddenly letting go, Porter fell flat, but was on his feet in a moment. Bensinger caught the sentinel who was disarmed and held him perfectly quiet. Another enemy was in the corner of the yard, and, seeing the rush, brought his gun up, but before he could take aim Porter's musket had covered him, and he was emphatically and briefly warned that any movement would forfeit his life. The third guard in the back yard was at once overpowered and knocked down, though not seriously injured, and in a moment the victory was completely won in this quarter. It was time, for matters had not gone as well in the front yard.

Knight and Brown went down the stairway as softly as cats, but the passage behind them was filled for a little time with those who were to make the attack at the back door, which left them without support, two men against four, and the latter armed. But they did not for a moment hesitate though the guards were, unfortunately, not near the door. Knight darted on the nearest, who was by the fence, and as he was bringing the gun down to a charge, Knight seized it with his left hand and struck its owner so powerfully with his right that the gun was instantly released. Brown had dealt with another in an effective manner, and reenforcements to the prisoners were now coming, but two other guards, who were close to the gate, instead of standing their ground, ran out and raised a great outcry. Wilson, Dorsey and others threw some loose bricks, which happened to be handy, after them, and prepared to charge out through the gate, when Knight heard the running of the reserve guard up the road, and, flinging away his musket, gave the word, "Boys, we've got to get out of this!" Then, hurrying through the hall and down to the lower corner of the yard, was in a moment on the top of the fence, being the last one, as it was closely followed by the others. The fence was June or July, and I was no slight obstacle, but I was soon passed and then followed a most desperate and exciting chase.

SEIZING THE GUARD.

Negro women had been particularly quiet, looking on the proceedings with the greatest interest, and only beginning to scream when the news quickly conducted them that they might do so with impunity in their share. Bufinton had gallantly assisted in opening the boxes, and, during it wide with an inspiration, "Jingle, John," when the rattling outcry from behind warned him that his own departure must be no longer delayed. Fry and myself had been engaged in securing the jailer, who, though old, was powerful and active, but had ceased struggling by the time that all the prisoners departing was at an end, so that there was no longer a motive in detaining on to Turner. We all rushed down stairs as best we could, well knowing that we would now be last in the flight, which was not the post of safety. The deserter passed us all like a tiger on the leap—I never saw such speed in a man's place—and getting to the back door long two guards awaiting him with bayonets at the charge. He seized one in each hand, cutting himself severely, but flinging them aside so forcibly that the men were very nearly overthrown, and then with the same swiftness continued over the fence and on to the woods, soon being in advance of all the fugitives. I learned that he escaped to Washington, but on his after returning south secretly to visit his family, was captured, recognized and hanged.

Bufinton followed after him and got over the fence with difficulty, but though a very brave man and a hard fighter, he was a poor runner. One Confederate, who was quite swift footed, kept right after him, gaining on him visibly, and threatening to shoot him if he did not stop. To his Bufinton, with his situation, for a running man has an unsteady hand and no certain aim, but he soon stopped because of exhaustion, just as the man overtook him. Now Bufinton thought it the right time to try his "Yankee wit," so he threw himself down and said: "I am sick now and that I can go no further; you can overtake that fellow," pointing to him who was running a close distance ahead. But the man saw through it, and with a great oath declared that he had him now and meant to keep him. Poor Bufinton was allowed a very brief time to rest, and then was marched back again to the prison. I have since heard doubted that if he had not wanted to unlock the doors he would have made good his own escape.

Capt. Fry, Porter, Wilson and others were close together in the flight, he being a little in advance. At a glance he saw that the way was open for them, and at once turned to the back door, which was left open by the passage of the rebel deserter. He got over the fence at a single effort, but finding Porter, chased as Bufinton had been, he used a little strategy. A good many shots were being fired in all directions, and he suddenly threw up his hands and fell flat. Those who were following him passed on after unwounded game, and when the way was clear he arose and resumed his course. He was seen again and had a most desperate chase, but reached the shelter of the friendly woods.

At no time in all my southern experience did I find defective vision to be such a dreadful misfortune as just now. My eyes were easily dazzled by a sudden increase of light, and as I came out of the obscurity into the broad light, for some seconds I could scarcely see at all. In this interval I was parted from Fry by running to the front door according to our original plan. There were two frightened guards in the gate tossing their gunsabout and seeming not to know what they should do. These were not dangerous looking and I ran up to them—for now the power of seeing had come back; but just as I was about darting out of the gate I saw the stream of guards outside. They called on me to surrender, but I was not ready for that and hurried back into the yard. A sentinel tried to shoot me at point blank range, but, fortunately, his gun failed to go off. I got back into the jail and now started out the back way—the course I should have taken at first. There were a number of guards in the back yard by this time, but in the confusion I got through them and to the top of the fence. What was my dismay to see a considerable number of self possessed soldiers outside waiting with lifted guns to shoot any one whose head might appear above the fence. I jumped very quickly down on the inside. One hope yet remained. I ran into the building and out at the front door, thinking that now the front gate might not be guarded, and that in this least likely way I might slip through. But it was vain; a large number of soldiers were on the ground and they were being carefully posted. I saw that the first panic and all the advantages of surprise were over. I ran back into the jail to try the back door once more, but a sentinel was now standing at it and several soldiers followed me into the building. I did not care whether they fired or not, for I felt utterly despaired. I went up the stairway, the guards not molesting me, and looked out at the chase which was still going over the adjacent hills.

It was a wild and exciting spectacle. Company after company of soldiers came up. The belles of the city were ranging, and shots were being fired rapidly, while loud commands and screams were mingled. I feared that many of our number were or soon would be killed. Then I left the window and went to the front room where the prisoners of war were, and to my unspeakable surprise found that they had not gone out of their room at all! They said that there was too much risk in it—that it would not be possible for any to escape.

Parrott and Redlick were captured in sight of the prison yard and Bufinton soon after. Bensinger, who had been so gallant in the sign, was in the yard, had a fearful experience in escaping. After the first race he was discovered in some men with dogs. For some three hours they pressed him sorely. He could get quite clear of the men, but the hounds clung to his track, like bloodhounds as they were. When wearied almost to death, he found a stream of water and by running for a long distance in that, was able at last to get away from them. But he was utterly exhausted in this long and terrible chase, and being alone, was in no fit condition for the terrible journey that lay before him.

The next evening he went to the negro quarters on a plantation and was received by the slaves with the sympathy they were always prepared to extend to fugitives. But the planter also saw his approach, and, coming unawares upon Bensinger, revolver in hand, forced his surrender. A messenger sent to Atlanta brought a company of cavalry very promptly, and we had the melancholy prospect of seeing him in chains before a few hours.

Mason was brought in shortly after, and the account of attacks. Six recaptured, the eight of our own party, with two others—Capt. Fry and the deserter escaped. This was a better result than we had ventured to anticipate when planning the attempt.

The most lamentable part of the story was the case of Barlow, a young East Tennessee captain, who alone attempted to go with us. He was only 18, but brave and very beautiful. No bullets come to him in the fight, but on jumping down from the train he broke his leg just above the ankle, and was dragged back to his death in a very rough manner. No attention was paid to him till the next morning, and very little then. He died from the injury, after enduring great suffering.

FLIGHT TO THE WOODS.

Their Business Booming.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at C. A. Wright & Co's Drug Store as their giving away to their customers of so many free trial bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article from the fact that it always cures and never disappoints. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it before buying by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted.

The Girls Deserved It.

A young man who was in the height of fashion was walking jaunty his way eastward over the sandy sidewalks of Jersey City, when, happening to meet a bevy of pretty girls, he smiled upon them. Then his fancy suddenly alighted, and he gave a comic leer and an exaggerated chew. But he to know what was going to happen to the young man found himself surrounded by a bevy of pretty girls, who began laughing, and in a most mischievous manner. One of them snatched him ceremoniously on the nose, another smashed his silk hat with a blow from her tin pail, knocking it well down in his ears. The girls are employed in a tobacco factory, and, like many other employes, they deem it highly insulting if any person passing them on the street happens to sneeze, for they take it for granted that the sneeze is meant for them, owing to the snuff and tobacco odor.

A Mean Millionaire.

"Not all rich men in Buffalo are liberal," said a young lawyer recently. "A certain man that I know reduced the wages of his hired man one half because he had introduced natural gas in his house, and then there was not so much work to be done, but the man had to put in all his time just the same. The day not long ago the millionaire told his man to go and examine a rented house and find out what repairs would need to be made before it was leased the 1st of May. The house was a good two miles' walk and the man was told he might put in his time footing it. The millionaire's wife scraped up 10 cents for the ride and the fellow started. As he had plenty of time he decided to walk back, and upon his return offered the remaining nickel to his master, who was not slow in replacing the coin in his pocket.

Americans are breaking down under high pressure application to business and duties at the desk; they are losing nerve force. Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic restores lost nerve force by supplying food for the nerve tissues, and by its gentle aperative action removes all restraint from the secretive organs, thence, curing all diseases of the stomach, liver and kidneys. Dr. Geo. Ferguson will supply the genuine Red Clover Tonic at 50 cents a bottle.

Visiting-Card Scrap Books.

Some of the ladies of Washington save the visiting cards they receive and paste them in scrap-books for preservation as souvenirs. They are quite pleasant mementoes of Washington life, particularly if the collection contains the names of the society belles and statesmen one is constantly reading about in the newspapers. A Senator's wife or any lady of prominence usually gets a large bowlful of cards at every reception, but they are often duplicates, and the sum total for the season will not be more than three or four hundred, for that is about the number of ladies and callers at the capital. I know of a lady now spending her thirtieth season at Washington, who has preserved the card of every person that has called upon her during this entire time. They fill half a dozen large scrap books and are several thousand in number.

Satisfactory Explanations.

A Connecticut merchant who applied to a New York house for goods on credit was met by the reply that he had failed and paid only ten cents on the dollar.

"Very true," he replied, "but I am the only merchant in the town that paid over six."

"Didn't you allow your paper to go to protest last winter?"

"Yes, but the doctors said I couldn't live twenty four hours just then, and I wasn't thinking of earthly things."

"Haven't you put all your property in your wife's name?"

"Well, yes; but she knows more about business in five minutes than I do in half a day."

He was given credit for $200.

The reason why Acker's Blood Elixir is warranted, is because it is the best Blood Preparation known. It will positively cure all Blood Diseases, purifies the whole system, and thoroughly builds up the constitution. Remember, we guarantee it. C. A. Wright & Co., Druggists.

LENGTH OF DAYS.

Five Hundred Years Old Is Living a Lost Art?

Is life worth living?

In the days of long ago people seemed to think it was if the length of time they devoted to learning acquainted them.

It would seem as though life must have afforded much of enjoyment in the good old days. Sophocles hung on until he was 130 years old, then perished by an accident. Attila was 124 when he died of the consequence of a revel on the night of his second marriage. This is a warning to young men. Epimenides was 157 at his regretted decease.

Crowns did not sit so heavily on the brows of monarchs as they seem latterly to do. Tolil, the founder of the Chinese Empire, reigned 119 years, and so did Appuans of Thebes in Egypt. Tacitus gives 150 years to Vesta, a German prince. Dadon, an Illyrian noble, lived for 500 years, according to Alexander Cornelius.

The art of living seems to be one of the many "lost arts" which the dark ages covered up, and modern civilization has not yet been able to uncover. It seems during life was not secured by being subject to poisons as remedies for disease, and is coming in modern practice. The ancients drained away on the blood story of people, for their bodies were the seat of parasites were unknown.

We read in the Old Testament descriptions found there of cities in Palestine and forests in Lebanon, including cedar, pines, fir, box, olive, myrtle, palm, oak, ash, and other trees, and of vines and other plants, herbs, flowers, and fruits, and of the cultivation of the land, and of the production of wheat, barley, oil, wine, honey, and other products, and of the use of oxen, asses, camels, sheep, goats, and other animals, and of the use of horses for command.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country. We simply ask those readers of this notice who have never used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

MEXICO

Her Snow Clad Mountains and Cathedrals — Mexican Politeness — A Bad Sight—Bull Fights and Pretty Girls.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 1st, '88.

"Mexico," shouted the conductor, and we all clambered out, but, where, oh, where was the city? Not to be seen. Carriages had to be taken to carry out the railroad's contract. Procuring a carriage bearing a white flag, which indicated it was of the first class, second and third class carriages carrying respectively blue and red flags, indicating their grades, we were driven rapidly to the principal hotel. One peculiar feature in Mexico, as well as in all hot climates is, the upper hotel rooms are the most desirable and rent for the highest prices, in consequence of being further removed from the dampness of the ground, and accessible to the fresh breezes. The bedroom floors are generally made of brick—sometimes tilings; bedsteads of iron, usually without mattresses, and the furniture not upholstered to prevent varmins harbouring itself. The food is peculiarly cooked and is to most Americans distasteful. In the city of Mexico, with the introduction of a little genuine Yankee enterprise, many industries could be started which would grow and prove so profitable that a prosperous future would certainly be in store for it. Mexico is the same, or at least looks so, in all its parts, every white street terminating at the foot of a snow clad mountain. Wealth and poverty are to be found in juxta position, and they don't seem to scowl or frown upon each other. The things to be seen in Mexico are the cathedrals, and to these all tourists pay a visit. Scarcely any photographs are sold except those of cathedrals, saints and mountains. Come along with me, and I will take you among the Mexican people, with skins almost black. Women go about the streets with babies strung on their backs and baskets of vegetables on their heads. They are not the inmates of homes they receive no education, and are taught to carry bundles on their heads before learning to talk. The children are frequently born and raised on the streets, having no homes, and never lying in a bed. On the streets at night may be found whole families huddled together with their heads on their knees. The living of the poor consists mainly of what they can pick up, refuse meats and the like. This, of course, is the lowest type in Mexico, and is connected in no way with the better classes. Lottery tickets and papers are sold by women, and they are the tourists pest. Mr. George Gedfield, a journalist, says: "The saddest thing I ever saw among all the sad things in Mexico was an incident that happened when I first arrived here. Noticing a policeman talking to a boy around whom a crowd of dusky citizens had gathered, I, true to journalistic instinct, went up to investigate. The boy, I found belonged to one of the many families who do odd jobs in the day time for a little food and sleep at night in some dark corner. Strung to the boy's back was a dying baby, and its little eyes were half-closed in death. The rough crowd watched in breathless facination its last slow gasps. The boy had no home to go to, he knew not where to find his parents at that hour of the day, and there he stood, while the baby died. In my newspaper career I have witnessed many sad scenes, but I never saw anything so heartrending as the death of that little innocent." Among the poor girls, untidy as they are, many beautiful faces are to be seen, their hair—three-quarters of their length, and of wonderful thickness—sometimes worn loose, but usually in two long plaits. The men in Mexico have usurped the rights of the women and wear the bangs themselves. The rich smoke cigarettes, so also do the poor, from the tottering old man down to the creeping babe.

The Mexicans make most excellent servants, and thieving is confined to suburbs. There is considerable cleanliness in the streets, but very little in the preparation of food. Pulque is sucked from the mother plant into a man's mouth, then ejected into a jar and brought to town in pig-skins for sale. Mexicans, however low, seem to possess considerable French politeness. It is not an unfrequent sight to see a man carrying a coffin through the streets in which is plainly visible the remains of a child. Anyone passing under these circumstances, all uncovering people, back drivers, even lift their hats. Droves of burros may be seen daily coming in from the mountains with baskets of pulque, eggs, roots and charcoal, which is sold, and I am told, frequently at many hundred per cent. Passing from the streets through the open doorway may be seen a great variety of occupations. They manufacture straw weaving bottoms in chairs, made equal to any in the United States, and the cobblers can repair a shoe so neatly that one could scarcely tell it had ever been broken. The natives are not quarrelsome or ill natured, and drunkenness is not nearly so common as in other cities. The women, though uncouth, as they are, are mindful to the wants of the females. The propensity for shedding tears among women is to be found to a considerable extent in Mexico, frequently, no doubt, for the best causes, but the men stop, console, pat them on the head, and smooth back their hair. Thus the largest portion of the population live homeless, uncared for, uneducated, and thus they die. The slaves in any country were better cared for. There are no Sundays, and yet every day seems like Sunday. At early dawn Sabbath morning bells are to be heard throughout the city, and men and women enter the churches on the bare floors the rich take their positions beside the poor stricken Indian, the richly dressed ladies close to the half naked Mexican women. Hats are never worn in churches, as it is considered disrespectful. Sunday is the great market day, and the people stop, going to and from church, and purchase their dinners. In Alameda Park three military bands are stationed playing all the afternoon, which seems to gratify the musical passion of the Mexicans, the bands being stationed in different parts of the park. A Mexican is all gentleness, Politeness and Civility except in love affairs and bull fights. Under these circumstances he is a transformed man. There have recently been some good bull fights here which is understood to mean that the bulls have been unusually ferocious and a large number of men and horses killed. A recent City ordinance prohibits these fights within the City limits so they have been carried on just outside within easy reach. Nearly all Americans upon their first visit to Mexico follow the native customs, attend church in the morning, a bull fight in the afternoon and theatre in the evening. It is enough to chill the blood in the veins of a sensitive American to see the large train loads of richly dressed ladies and children rushing to the grounds to witness this inhuman sport. In the enclosure there is a band constantly playing, but it is quickly drowned by the shouts of "El toro!" "El toro!" followed by "Bravo!" "Bravo!"

These bull fights are very expensive to the managers, none of them costing less than $5000, just equivalent to one night of Patti at the New York Academy of Music. Said a Spaniard to me, You Americans condemn this as cruel sport while all through your country you have men training to pound each other to pieces." The Government charges $250 for a license for each fight, and if the bulls chance to be tame the managers are fined for swindling the people. Frequently fights are given for charitable purposes and young girls dress like brides in white, with veils, satin shoes, and do all the directing, while the fighters are young men of position and birth. It would naturally be supposed that when a man was killed in the arena, the fight would be stopped, but quite contrary; his remains are dragged out and another takes his place to satisfy the increased thirst for blood. Senor Javino has a nephew, Juan M. Moreno, who gives promise of being the best fighter in the republic; has magnificent physique, 6 feet 4 in., handsome face and fair complexion, brown hair and could be easily taken for an American boy. El Americano, as he is called, is a great favorite with Mexicans. After the fight is over the band depart, the trains are quickly filled by reluctant passengers and scores of hucksters line their pockets by selling red pepper and crushed corn. After the repast every man, woman and child lights a cigarette and, live y discussions over the merits of the fight follow.

The policemen who accompany each train are about the only persons that do any work, except the drivers.

FARMERS' SOCIAL CLUB

Tuesday evening, March 27, the Farmers' Social Club met with R. R. Gillespie's.

The weather and roads were unfavorable, yet there was a good attendance and the meeting proved very enjoyable.

The program consisted of music and charades, all of which were performed. After the program a pound supper and warm [illegible] were served; after which [illegible] was spent in pleasant social [illegible] until the hour [illegible] warmed up, the roads were good, the moon bright and all departed for home with the feeling that the season spent at the club was one of pleasant enjoyment, probably the most pleasant possible.

The club adjourned to meet the last Friday afternoon in May. Place of meeting and program given later in the season.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

MRS. BEN. FRANKLIN NAPOLEON JONKS:—"Now, this looks like business. A grand Woman's Convention in Washington, and Congress will be compelled to give us our rights. Why should'nt women have the privilege of running the machine, making tariff speeches, lobbying for river and harbor bills and getting rich holding office, same as the mens. Yes, we intend to get our rights, if we have to fight for them."

ON THE FLORIDA REEFS.

This sketch of some thrilling experience of a Lenawee County boy is taken from the Adrian Times:

Will G. Walby, of this city, who returned from a trip to Florida on Thursday morning, had an experience during his absence as thrilling as it was unpleasant, and which nearly cost him his life.

Accompanied by Wm. C. Pond, of Jacksonville, Florida, Mr. Walby started from Ceder Key, some time ago, for a cruise off the Gulf coast. Their expedition, which was to be varied by fishing and hunting, was in a yacht, some thirty feet in length. They had stocked the boat with plenty of provision, as well as some expensive guns and fishing tackle.

At Clearwater harbor the yacht ran aground, and commenced to leak badly, a board in the bottom being sprung.

This damage was repaired, and the boys proceeded, making a thorough exploration of the Manatee river. On Sunday, March 18th, Terraceia bay was left behind, on the trip returning to Cedar Key. On Monday morning the yacht capsized in a violent gale, off the outer reef of Sand Key, the accident being caused by the breaking of the mast, which parted at the deck saddle. As the boat overturned the sheet caught around Pond's neck, throwing him twenty feet into the water and nearly strangling him. Walby, too, narrowly escaped drowning. Everything which the yacht contained, including a satchel, belonging to Mr. Walby, in which were $150 in currency, went to the bottom.

For eight hours the boat floated in sight of land, the young men clinging to the bottom as best they could, but being continually washed off by the high seas. Finally the boat drifted in the direction of Sand Key, the anchor catching a short distance from the shore. Both left the craft and swam to the island. Passing vessels were unavadingly hailed, no attention being paid to the castaways. Nearly worn out by the miserable experience thro' which they had passed, with nothing in the way of provisions except a bottle of quinine, which Mr. Walby had saved when the boat went down, and two eggs which washed ashore, they remained on the island for two days.

Matters were taking a desperate turn. Pond was sick and completely exhausted, while Walby's strength was rapidly deserting him. Something had to be done and done quickly, so the Adrianite stripped his underclothing, plunged into the water and started for the main land, promising to return to his companion with help, if he ever reached the shore in safety. The struggle was a hard one, and the task which was by no means easily accomplished, left the exhausted condition of the swimmer, but not Walby, and his hand was reached. Six miles over broken shells and pebbles Mr. Walby walked in his bare feet, finally reaching a house. He had scarcely [illegible] when he fainted, [illegible] in his spent condition. Two men were dispatched in a small boat for Mr. Pond and brought him safely to shore, but he died [illegible] Jackson[illegible] as soon as they had [illegible] recovered.

Since his return to Adrian the young fowl[illegible] has been confined to his bed. His feet are cut and bruised as the result of his barefoot journey, while his body is very sore from the blows received while he was [illegible] to the overturned boat. His pluck and endurance [illegible] are to be [illegible]

COBWEBS IN CAST IRON.

How an Inventor Has Arranged for the Preservation of Fine Patterns.

This interesting discovery—for it is that as well as an invention—has the merit of extreme simplicity, while it apparently opens up a wide field for future applications of the underlying principle. He successfully carbonizes lace or other fine fabrics by a process similar to that employed in preparing the carbon filaments used in incandescent electric lights. The lace is reduced to carbon or charcoal, but so gradually that it retains its structure intact, and is both flexible and incombustible. It was not known, and until he demonstrated the fact it would scarcely have been believed, that such extremely delicate fabrics—the charcoal of fine lace filaments—could pass through a bath of molten white-hot iron without injury. Yet such is the fact, and herein lies an important discovery, for Mr. Outerbridge, having carbonized a piece of lace, or of dress pattern, or embossed goods, uses this delicate ornamental pattern for the face of a mold backed by either metal or green sand, and pouring into it steel or iron of any quality, gets a sharp casting of the pattern, which may be used either as an ornamental casting or as a die for embossing leather, paper, or metallic surfaces. The same mold may be used for obtaining several castings, and no special care is required, either in preparing the carbonized material, or in filling the mold with molten metal to preserve the fabric from destruction. Fine lace carbonized suspended in the center of a mold has even been employed to divide a casting into two parts, presenting the pattern on each face. The process has already reached a practical stage, and seems to open up a wide field of useful applications. A peculiar quality possessed by iron greatly aids in the use of these carbonized materials for the production of castings presenting very fine lines, such as single threads of lace. The iron has an affinity for carbon and hugs it closely. It has a tendency to absorb the carbon and if it remained fluid long enough would doubtless do so, but as it cools almost immediately there is no appreciable destruction of the fibers.

One Landlord's Way.

"Well, old fellow, what have you been doing all these years since I saw you last?"

"Got married, settled down, and am running a hotel out in Michigan. You know how I like to hunt and fish?"

"Certainly. Do you have good hunting and fishing where you live?"

"First class, and when a man comes to my hotel without baggage, I ask him if he can hunt; if he can't, if he can fish. If he can't do either I strike him for his money in advance. If he can do both, he is good for his two weeks' board."

As we constantly hear rumors of a great war in Europe which, beginning on the Russian frontier, may involve all the powers, it is interesting to see how France has prepared for her next trial. In "Germany, France's Rulwer," in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for April, is a remarkable and timely article, showing the new lines of defensive works in that country evidently from careful and continuous study. The whole number is bright and interesting. Mary Titcomb tells of "The Ways and Words of American Lawyers." Zoel Ruffin, in "That Eccentric Englishman," portrays the unmistakable Briton on his travels. Easter was observed in an appropriate manner at the Universalist church. The pastor preached a sermon in the morning commemorative of the day, and in the evening a Sunday School concert was given which was listened to by a crowded house. Our Universalist friends are noted for their entertaining Sunday School concerts, but they surpassed themselves in the program rendered last Sunday evening.

Jeff Pilbeam was driving up the Globe Mill hill last Tuesday forenoon when his team took fright at a baby cab and started up Chicago street on a keen scoot. He hung on to the reins however and they ran the entire length of Chicago street to the West side of the corporation before he stopped them. His family were in the wagon at the time, and although they had quite a fright, fortunately no damage was done.

Easter Sunday was duly observed at St. Peter's church, in the usual elaborate manner. The chancel was handsomely decorated with mottoes, flowers and potted plants. Three services were held during the day, one at six o'clock A. M., one at 10:30, and a special Sunday School service at four P. M., all of which were well attended. Even the afternoon service given by the Sunday School drew a congregation that filled the auditorium of the church. Special music had been prepared appropriate to the day, the weather was beautiful, and everything conspired to render the day a most impressive and interesting one to the members and attendants of St. Peter's church.

After a hard day's work in the office, the store, the counting-room or the study, nothing is so instrumental in resting one in the evening as a comfortable, easy chair. We do not mean a chair which simply looks comfortable, but one that is really comfortable. We have been the fortunate possessor of one of the latter class for some weeks, and have taken solid comfort in it many an evening. It is a chair finely upholstered, with exceedingly comfortable springs, a high back always waiting to rest the head, a reading attachment for holding a book, and a foot-rest which can be adjusted to many positions. By a single movement the back of this chair can be changed to almost any angle, from an upright to a very reclining position. It is thus a perfect chair, a willing servant to every mood or whim of the occupant; and under all circumstances will be made comfortable. Did you ask where you may get one? They are manufactured by the Luburg Manufacturing Co., 145 North 8th street, Philadelphia, Penna., who will send catalogues upon application, inclosing a stamp.

THE VILLAGE ELECTION.

The election last Monday was very warmly contested and a large vote was polled for a spring election. There were three tickets in the field, all of which were unexceptionable personally considered, and a spirited struggle was the natural result. Of the four principal officers, the Republicans elected Supervisor and Treasurer; the Democrats, Clerk and Justice. The Republicans also chose one constable, H. W. Stevens, and the Democrats captured the balance of the ticket. The three Republicans chosen are all members of the G. A. R. Post, which fact doubtless had something to do with the result. The total poll was 705. The party vote, as represented by the vote on drain commissioner, which approximated the vote almost exactly on each ticket, was Republican 270, Democratic 288, Prohibition 145. There was an immense amount of splitting done, only one-half of the total number of tickets being voted straight. Of the "straights" there were 126 Republican, 150 Democratic and 37 Prohibition. Justice Burridge made a phenominal run, receiving the highest majority of any man on either ticket. It was a proper recognition of his valuable services as a faithful public officer. Below we give the result in detail, giving the exact figures on each candidate taken from the Clerk's tally sheet. The men elected are all well qualified, most of whom have had previous experience, and their official duties will be faithfully performed. In the table below the three parties are designated respectively by the letters D, R and P. The parties are all well organized now, and in good fighting trim, and Tecumseh is likely to have plenty of politics between this time and next November.

THE BAND BENEFIT.

The benefit concert given by the City Band, on Tuesday evening, was without any discount, a superior entertainment. Of course the program consisted mostly of instrumental music, but there was so much variety in the character of the selections that it did not become monotonous in the least. Some of the pieces were encored and all were favorably received. Miss Carrie Powers favored the audience with two fine solos. The first one "The Broken Picture" was warmly encored which she politely acknowledged. In the second part she sang "Dear Robin, I'll be True," which called forth a rapturous encore and she responded with "Rock a bye Baby." Miss Jennie Root presided at the piano with her usual grace and efficiency. The closing instrumental piece, "The Jolly Blacksmiths," although a very difficult composition, was splendidly rendered and fittingly terminated the evening's entertainment. The receipts amounted to $60 which will net a nice sum for the band treasury.

Peterson's Magazine for April comes as usual, among the very earliest of the month's periodicals, and is one of the most interesting and welcome. The steel-plate, wood-engravings and dress-patterns are all of superior merit, and the literary portion of the magazine deserves the highest praise. This friend of countless households for so many years is still as thoroughly to be depended on as when it began its popular career. It never fails each twelvemonth, to bring forward new attractions in its literary, fashion and household departments. While retaining old favorites, "Peterson" constantly finds new writers of [illegible] and, in all matters appertaining to dress and needle-work, it does not render itself more and more indispensable to ladies. It is a live, [illegible] magazine, up to the needs of the [illegible] in every respect, and the [illegible] of its ever growing popularity [illegible] Two Dollars a year. Address Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

WEDDING BELLS.

On Thursday, March 29th, at the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Elias Brown, in Raisin, occurred the marriage of their eldest daughter Louesa, to Mr. Edwin J. Tafft, of the same township. The ceremony was performed at three o'clock in the afternoon by Rev. J. M. Getchell, in a few impressive words. Congratulations followed and then a sumptuous repast. The afternoon was passed in music and social gaiety, the numerous guests all imbibing the spirit of the occasion. A beautiful array of wedding gifts cheered the hearts of bride and groom and challenged the admiration of the friends in attendance. A full list of them is appended below.

Both the contracting parties are well known in the town of Raisin, where they have lived since childhood, and are held in universal esteem by all. The bridal trip consisted of a journey from the home of the bride's parents to the groom's own farm "over the Raisin" where the happy couple entered at once upon the mysteries and responsibilities of housekeeping. They begin their new life accompanied by the congratulations of a host of friends, in which the HERALD begs leave to join.

SEED OATS. SEED OATS.

New variety—Great yield—See what Jno. F. Schroeder, who raised them last year, says, and then come in and buy them:

MARCH 2nd, 1888.

MR. C. A. SLAYTON—DEAR SIR—In regard to the Early Swedish Oats I got of you last spring for seed, I have to say I sowed them, giving them an equal chance with other oats, and found them to yield over forty bushels per acre more than the Welcome oats. Yielding fifty per cent more bushels per acre than other early white oats. They are a good stiff straw and not liable to lodge as other oats.

I shall sow all my best ground this spring with these oats, and shall have a few bushels left to dispose of to other farmers. First come first served.

Yours truly,
JNO. F. SCHROEDER.

The highest average obtained by an applicant for third grade certificate was 89.5, and the average of all the markings on certificates was 83.4.

While Mrs. Dr. Hall, of Clayton, was vainly trying to fill a student lamp at the wrong end one day last week, a few drops of oil got spilled and ignited. Postmaster Perkins stepped in and snuffed out the glim, but a big alarm was raised notwithstanding. The fire department came out on dress parade; the Journal man sharpened two pencils on both ends, borrowed a quire of paper on which to write a detailed account of the catastrophe, men closed shops, and women nearly fainted with excitement, but all to no avail—the entertainment ended in smoke. "I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral an important remedy."

For Home Use.

"I have tested its curative power, many times, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious cases of the throat and lungs, [illegible] in children or adults."—Mrs. L. G. Elderly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors gave me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had taken a bottle, found relief. I persisted in the use of this medicine until a complete cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—S. H. Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"For years I suffered from a severe cough, which seemed on my lungs. I had recourse all the alarming symptoms of consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in chest and sides, and was so emaciated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first dose of this medicine, and, after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON FOR APRIL 8th, 1888.

CHRIST'S LAST WARNING. MATT. XXIII 24-39.

NOTES.—This lesson closes the discussion of views against the scribes and Pharisees. They had tried hard enough to entangle him. He had most skillfully eluded and beaten them in argument. Now he turns to his disciples and the crowd before him and warns it to be discomfited adversaries those terrible woes. Seven of these there were, and the sixth is found in the first two verses of to-day's lesson. His denunciation was against hypocrisy, this pretense of being what one is not. This was the Pharisee's religion.——"Whited sepulchres."—These are conspicuous graves, whitewashed or newly plastered before the Passover Feast, that passers-by may easily distinguish them and so avoid pollution.——"Build the sepulchres of the prophets."—A portion of the temple offerings was for that purpose. Herod the Great rebuilt the tomb of David.——"Garnish the tombs."—Adorn with sculptures or bas reliefs. They ease their consciences by adding some beauty to the cold monument to the dead, instead of rewriting and following their living words.——"Fill ye up then."—A reference to what they are about to do. The consumption of their wickedness in the murder of the greatest prophet of them all.——"Serpents." This was the worst epithet he could use, for the serpent was to them the embodiment of all that was deceitful, malignant and hypocritical.——"Therefore."—It was because of this perverse spirit that had characterized them from beginning to now; because of this they would do in the present and future what they had in the past. The Pharisee's yesterday is an earnest of to-day.——"Zacharias son of Barachias."—This is the last murder recorded in the Hebrew canon while that of Abel was the first. The difficulty with this is one that all must frankly recognize. II Chron. speaks of Zacharias as the son of Jehoida, while here he is mentioned as the son of Barachias. Barachias might have been his grandfather instead of his father and so he might have been known to Jewish tradition and according to usage as the "Son of Barachias." Whether the explanation is accepted or not, it can be easily and most naturally explained as an error on the part of some one, the transcriber or narrator; but we cannot think it to be an error on the part of Christ.——"Your house."—Your temple and city.——"Till ye shall say."—The denunciation concludes with words of hope. Compassion and hope fitly close this terrible and scathing exposure of hypocrisy.

INSTRUCTION.—A hypocrite is one who acts a part; one who pretends to be what he is not; one who is double-faced; one who is false within and yet tries to ring true without. Such were those our Saviour cursed. They added to lying hypocrisy viperish malignity that could sting and kill. May each one of us flee the faintest breath of insincerity and be true to our God, our brethren and ourselves.

Matthew has given us two wonderful examples of Christ's eloquence. The Sermon on the Mount, his "Blesseds," and the denunciation of the hypocrites, his "Woes." In this lesson he pours forth his wrath hot and consuming against the meanest class of people in the world. Both proceed from the same teacher. They supplement each other. The one warns and we resolve; the other warns and we flee from the sin of hypocrisy forever.

Victor Hugo once said: "There is no more sovereign eloquence than true indignation." Christ was never more sovereign than when he hurled anathemas against the deceitful. With him it was a proof of sinlessness. It was true indignation, for it had a right basis.

The indignation of a true, upright, holy Christian man cannot be uncalled. It never errs in spirit. The grandiloquent indignation of a hypocrite or a mountebank is mocked even while he mouths it forth.

This is what makes infidels. To follow a man who appears holy and true, to accept his influence, to imbibe his spirit, and then find out that he is merely a clever actor and one is a fool to be so taken in. Oh! the glory of absolute truth and honor from A to Z in the divine alphabet of Christian morality!

Those are none the less hypocrites who pretend to be worse than they really are. This is simple folly. Such a one rests on no ground at all. He thinks he is better than he is, and that all wrongfully abuse him. By his very action he cuts off all trust and hope. Be yourself if you really tend to the good. Get a new self if you are really bad. Don't try to deceive either way.

One of the reflective results of continuous pretense is unconsciously hypocrisy. This is the most hopeless. The victim is bound hand and foot. He cannot tell whether he lies or tells the truth. His moral nature is torpid.

Now is the time to subscribe!

A DEER HUNT IN ILLINOIS.

A Story Told by an Old Resident of Patoka.

"It were probably forty years ago that we boys—the Fosters, the Meadors and myself—rigged up our guns and went [illegible] one of our periodical deer hunts. It wasn't unusual in those days to go with the intention of bringing some fresh meat home either. If I ever learned Uncle Tom and deer I'd get a lickin' [illegible] even if the war-whoop of the other boys warned [illegible] range. The old deer [illegible] from Bear Creek [illegible] the east. We weren't [illegible] the dogs howled, the [illegible] yelled, and the [illegible] that cave and scattered [illegible] Long-point on the southwest. [illegible] scattered out, and the days found me east. I steered to the northeast [illegible] the deer and followed [illegible] It wasn't long till I heard [illegible] to myself. They [illegible] But I did in the fourth, and in [illegible] an hour I heard a noise not far from me. I looked at my gun to be sure it was primed, then looked about me and [illegible] two hundred yards [illegible] for the mouth. I cocked [illegible] He gave a leap and I blazed the flint-lock that fooled me for once. I sped in the direction he had taken [illegible] the boys again like a cyclone. I soon saw blood along the track and knew my shot had counted. I [illegible] and my horse stopped [illegible] ahead and there he lay [illegible] in the weeds [illegible] I jumped up and [illegible] and [illegible] also downed two [illegible] thrown across the horses.

"This was good enough for one day and we all started for Harry Foster's, happy as larks. After we got there and rested a short time all hands pitched in, cleaned and cut them up. We divided Meadors to do the dividing. He turned his back to the pile and while Harry Foster pointed out some particular piece, Meador would name one of the party, and the piece pointed out would be passed over. This was followed till the whole lot was divided. This is what we thought the fairest way to divide our game and always did so on such occasions, and we would go home well satisfied with what we received, and many is the time we'd come home with all we could wadd'le."

TAKE A DAY OFF OCCASIONALLY

We in This Country Live Too Fast and Work Too Hard.

In Europe men of four-score and over hold their own with younger men. In this country it is a common thing to find men yielding to the strain of overwork at the age of 60. We do not find such examples in other countries. Brougham was an active man at 90, and Wellington was a power when he was 83., Gladstone, at the age of 76, is the head and front of a great reform movement. Kossuth, at 86, is in vigorous health, and Chevreul, who is now 101, is still making chemical experiments. But this country is the the land of old young men. Dyspepsia, paralysis, and Bright's disease stalk behind our youngsters, our boys who are gray-headed at 30 and ready to die or lose their grip at 50.

It is strange. We are wonderfully learned in all that pertains to diet. Nowhere in the world do people make such an outcry against liquor, tobacco, and everthing that is said to be injurious to health. Even in our schools little boys and girls are taught the principles of hygiene. What is the result? Our newspapers are filled with advertisements of nerve tonic, brain foods, and all sorts of invigorators for our Nation of physical and mental wrecks.

Is it our climate, our diet, or our overwork? Perhaps it is all due to hurry, flurry, and worry. We despise small things, and everybody is trying to make a fortune at one lick. Our young men try to leap to the topmost round of the ladder, instead of climbing. Every man wants to dictate, lead, and boss the job. The man who starts with nothing and makes a million dollars throws up the sponge and retires from the business arena bitterly disappointed because he failed to make ten millions.

Now our European cousins have a way of making haste slowly. They do not exhaust all their mental and physical capital in a succession of mad leaps. They believe in plodding, but they like to take a day off occasionally, and they are all the fresher and stronger for it. They don't know as much as we do about the laws of health, but they manage to enjoy life. It will not do to sneer at the man and the ways of the Old World. It would be wise to imitate them in some respects.

WOE FOR JAPANESE EDITORS.

Unique Rules Regarding the Press Recently Promulgated by the Mikado.

A series of laws concerning the press which have been promulgated in Japan have been received with delight by the editors of the country. One of the laws provides that in making news items, no editor shall be allowed to show the slightest disposition to reason. A reply to any paragraph in the newspapers must be published on the same page as the article called it forth, and in the same column, but if the reply twice the space of the article it may be charged for at advertising rates. The minister will have the right to confiscate every newspaper of which he may be jealous to execute, however absurd the reasons may be. The power of editors are to be absolutely in every direction. The law will be in force permanently after an experimental period of six months. It is to be hoped that in the meanwhile the Japanese editors will be able to assert their rights.

Not Entire Strangers.

"I hear you are going to be married, Miss Mildred. Is it true that you have only known your intended husband a week?"

"Why, we are not entire strangers. We have been engaged for one week."

We have sold Ely's Cream Balm for some years, and have no hesitation in pronouncing it the most successful remedy for catarrh. Our experience is that a few applications of the Balm relieve the worst cases of catarrh in the head. Our experience is that it does not contain a particle of mercury or any other injurious drug. It is perfectly free from offensive odor, and is a remedy that we can recommend to our patrons. H. H. Montgomery & Co., Druggists, Decorah, Iowa.

I have used Ely's Cream Balm for catarrh, for which Eastern physicians had given me up to die. It has proved a cure.—B. P. Wilson, Denver, Colo.

A Home for Women.

John Wanamaker, the Philadelphia merchant, employs a small army of women, most of them young and many of them with no home of their own. His attention being called to the subject of their lives, he made it his business to look into it [illegible] employers in [illegible] always desperate when dismissed, and which, turned to his own interests, has made his great fortune. The result of his inquiries was a decision to build them a home. It is to be a palace. They will pay for what they get, but he does not look to make any profit from it, and in consequence they will be obliged to pay less than they can [illegible] elsewhere for what they get.

Miss Mary Whitcomb, of Boston, recently bequeathed the income of her property for the purchase of beautiful gifts for her friends, who should start in life or change their condition. Three large gifts are proposed this year, one being a fine [illegible] The first night after the sweet-[illegible] the gifts, and others were received the following days. Examination of the gifts showed that early all the properties and were gnawed, and that some of them were carried some distance from the original bunch. The rats had plenty of corn-bread, but ate the gifts as though they liked them well. The mystery is to certain how the rats carry gifts into their holes and there gnaw them and that many a gift bag contains rat droppings.

His Watch Chain Burns Up.

He had not come by it honestly, I was evidently not for a time. Among the paraphernalia of his make up was a multitude of gaudy articles of jewelry, two watches and chains. He had a fancy for the latter in a certain down town saloon, as he did so the above mentioned watch chain came in contact with the lighted end of a cigar which he had held there but a moment before. The result was an "incipient" blaze by which the chain and part of his vest were destroyed. No insurance. It is needless to say that the composition was celluloid.

A Correct Diagnosis.

Young Physician (diagnosing a case)—The trouble with you, sir, is you eat too much.

Patient—Doctor, what I eat wouldn't keep a bird alive.

Young Physician—Hump. I see your system needs nourishment. You don't eat enough.

Patient—How much is it, doctor?

Young Physician—Two dollars, please.

The New School of Journalism.

Reporter—Good morning, Mr. Jones, I've got something here that'll curl your hair. The finest bit of scandal with side-lights and everything anybody could possibly want—nothing like it ever published in a New York paper.

Editor—Good, Mr. Samuels, we'll have to raise your salary—is it—er—racy enough for the Sunday edition, or would you slap it in to-morrow?

A Secret

of good health is found in the regular movement of the bowels and perfect action of the Liver. These organs were intended by nature to remove from the system all impurities. If you are constipated, you offer a "standing invitation" to a whole family of diseases and irregularities which will surely be "accepted," and you will have guests unwelcome and determined. All these unhappy conditions may be averted by the timely use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. Powerful for the effectual regulation of the bowels and Liver, establishing a healthy action of the entire wonderful organism with which we are created.

Use the surest remedy for catarrh—Dr. Sage's.

Vulte Swelling.

Mr. M. S. Hamlin, one of the best known insurance men in North Carolina, writes from Winston, as follows: "Ever since I was seven years of age I have had what the doctors call hip disease, and which I call white swelling. My hip was drawn out of place. There was a swelling at the kneepoint, where there is a profuse running, which has been there for years. Of course this has greatly depleted my system, together with surgical operation on the leg bone. I tried every known blood purifier to build up my system, but none did me good until I took S. S. S. I use it every spring. It always builds me up, giving me appetite and digestion, and enables me to stand the long, trying, enervating, hot summer days. To me there is no such medicine for purifying the blood and building up the wasted system as S. S. S. On using it I soon became strong of body and easy of mind. My color changed from a pale, worn look to a healthy, robust complexion."

Mr. G. N. Frizzel, of Farmersville, Texas, writes: "About August 1st, 1885, an eruption appeared on my arms and legs, which pained me much and seemed to affect my physical condition generally. On the advice of a physician at this place, I finally commenced using Swift's Specific. I am glad to say that after using three large bottles the sores have all healed."

Nervous Diseases.

There are more nervous than blood diseases. Thus, a weakness of the nerves of the brain causes headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, etc., as does that of the nerves of the stomach dyspepsia, pain, wind, etc., of the bowels, makes weak backs, heavy feet, produces delirium, convulsions, etc., of the womb, induces miscarriages, sterility, pain, etc., of the sexual organs, in one word, the general weaknesses Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine surpasses all other remedies. THE OLD TIMES AND THE NEW, SOCIALLY CONSIDERED.

Written for and Read at the Northern Lenawee Farmers' Club at O. P. Remington's, by Mrs. L. E. Taylor.

[illegible] and spinning wheel and loom
Were every home's adorning,
And modest homespun suit no youth,
Or fair maid thought of scorning.

Our fathers every muscle strained,
In fallow and in clearing,
Our mothers wrought such heavy tasks
As fire us, just in hearing.

Yet oft they found an afternoon
When resting from their labors,
They yoked the oxen up and all
Went visiting their neighbors.

Did I say rested? well, the men
Sat 'round and "logged" and "reckoned,"
But do you think the women lost
One quarter of a second?

Not they! of how the socks wore out
They were not so unwitting,
And straight from out each work bag came
The ever ready knitting.

Then who might tell which faster flew,
Swift tongues or nimble fingers,
Till tea was ready—crowning hour
Where memory fondly lingers.

What toothsome shortcakes graced the board,
What tempting plates of honey,
And home made cheese! go, find its like
To-day, for love or money.

The children wearied, muttering
What patience they were at it,
And wondering, would their elders never
Before they'd cleared the table?

And, when they rose, to take their part
With eager footsteps hasted,
Only to find the day half spent,
The choicest viands tasted.

The woods were all the forests fell
The stumps and pond holes vanished,
The spring was covered in, the spring house
Gone to ruin, and decayed.

Then, as now, we had our heartaches,
Sorrows, as we live and wonder,
Then, as now, [illegible]

[illegible] and good intentions [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] thought to weigh, or measure,
In unjust balances,
Be that as more, he gave us [illegible]
The joy of having neighbors.

It's thought we took root and grew apace
The people met together,
Told how they managed crops, and how
They overcame the weather.

But mingled with their weighty themes
Song, gossip, recitation,
As if to school day joys they had
The pleasures of vacation.

The children, bless them! early found,
Such festives good to pray in—
We took them with us to the clubs,
And gave them room to play in.

Till in its turn, each busy home
With mirth and song resounded—
We'd canonize him, did we know
The farmer's club who founded.

Fond happy gatherings, where meet
In union close and pleasant
The hearty friendliness of yore,
The culture of the present.

They clear the cobwebs from our brains,
Keep our thoughts from rusting,
Also in the genial warmth bow hearts
The cold of heart are rusting.

We clasp and clasp each other's hands,
Speak words of cordial greeting,
And wiser, happier, kindlier grow
For every joyful meeting.

Long may they flourish, till time's being
Their rightful consummation,
When in one band of union join
The farmers of the nation.

Then we can some graver questions [illegible]
Dark, stormy days that call for righting
Social or political may we stand
For truth and justice fighting.

May the Old house wives songs, nor lets
Shall hinders vex and fret her
Nor mourn its good old times, forgot
The times we have are better.

A Cage for a Fine Young Lady.

[illegible] Wednesday [illegible] is in regard to [illegible] make up of a wife [illegible] woman. The [illegible] by an un[illegible] to let [illegible] for her. After [illegible] the family returned [illegible] of all who had [illegible] the daughter was [illegible] improved. From a [illegible] she had become not [illegible] with a [illegible] manner. After [illegible] out that she in Paris the girl had been taken to a model baker, who in consideration of a large sum agreed to construct a wife figure of the desired proportions, which was in every [illegible] the back, and was of such [illegible] that its presence would [illegible] save by the keenest scrutiny. This cage accessitates, with evening dress, a band of velvet, or collar of some description, and as long as worn effectually precludes the idea of decolete gowns on the part of the wearer.

Eating the Prodigal's Husk.

In a western (N. S. W.) town is—in the humble but useful capacity of maker of a well-known baking powder—a nephew of the late Lord Iddesleigh. And at a back blocks public house we meet the third son of a wealthy duke in the humble but useful capacity of ostler.

The HERALD would like to know:

Whether the Adrian people are happy over their acquisition of the Gale Plow works.

Whether the Adrian editors will ever vote the [illegible] ion ticket.

Whether Adrian is considered by the Prohibition committee a promising missionary field to start a prohibition paper.

Whether the Detroit ring will succeed in bucking Gov. Luce off the track.

Whether Don M. Dickinson will be appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

Whether James G. Blaine will be nominated any way, notwithstanding his declination.

In the matter of peculiar politics, Clinton takes the belt this spring. Frances Rector was the candidate for School Inspector on the Republican ticket and his wife Frances D. Rector was the opposing candidate on the Democratic ticket. The wife cleaned out the husband most beautifully, figuratively speaking, receiving a larger majority than any other person on the ticket. Here is a practical illustration of woman's rights to [illegible] the most [illegible] sense of the word.

A woman [illegible] at Richmond recently [illegible] Although [illegible] she [illegible] heard it [illegible]. She [illegible] the pillows [illegible] paper [illegible] from the wall, [illegible] her husband [illegible] upset the [illegible] and fell in the [illegible] through her locket case, and finally found the watch—in her bustle.

In the last century there has been considerable progress in temperance reform, notwithstanding occasional set backs. One hundred years ago the town of Wilton, N. H., passed the following vote: "That the town provide one barrel of West India rum, six barrels of New England rum, one barrel of good brown sugar, half a chest of good lemons, two loaves of loaf sugar for training and raising a new meeting house."

Grand Haven thieves stole a tug last Sunday night, probably on the theory that the better the day the better the deed. They should anchor their churches up there, or the rascals will be stealing a meeting house next.

Senator Jagalls respectfully declines to have his name used for a new brand of shaving soap. He acts wisely. His name would be more appropriate for a brand of red flanned shirts.

The President and Cashier of the North Carolina bank recently busted, adopted a new fashion in skipping to Canada. They took the colored porter of the bank with them to carry the coin. They were thus enabled to save a portion of their booty, as they did not have to run the gauntlet of the colored porter on a Pullman car.

It is said that nearly every member of Congress intends making a speech on the tariff bill. Well, let them go in. We believe that all raw materials should be placed on the free list.

An exchange says that it costs $20,000,000 per annum to support the imperial family in Germany. This apparent extravagance is explained on the theory that the imperial family keep a colored coachman and three or four kitchen girls.

Colver and Barnum.

P. T. Barnum boasts that the best offices of his life are to be found in the church pew, and in the concluding chapter of a new edition of his autobiography gives this true story: "On Sunday evening, May 21, 1887, I entered the Church of the Messiah. Rev. Robert Collyer, pastor, and quietly took a back seat, only to find the keen eyes of the preacher fixed upon me, and to hear his resonant voice announce, 'Let P. T. Barnum come to a back pew of this church and I invite him to come forward and take a seat in my family pew.' Mr. Barnum always gives me a good seat in his circus and I want to give him a good one in my church.' Mr. Barnum adds: 'I thought the reverend gentleman had the courage of his convictions, and I was grateful to his congregation for the gravity with which they listened to this pulpit notice and made ways for me as, with some embarrassment, I took the prominent seat indicated.'"

BAKING POWDERS.

OFFICIAL TESTS BY THE OHIO STATE FOOD COMMISSION

Analyses of the Chief Brands of the Country—Their Strength and Value Ascertained.

The Ohio State Dairy and Food Commission, under the direction of the Legislature of that State, has made public the result of its recent official examination of the baking powders of the market. As many of the brands analyzed are in use throughout the country, the report of the Commission will be found of general interest.

The startling fact is brought out by the report that of the thirty different brands of baking powder analyzed, twenty are made from alum, a substance declared by the highest medical authorities to be injurious to health when used in food.

The commission classify the baking powders into three general divisions, according to their value:

1st.—Cream of Tartar Baking Powders.
2d.—Phosphate Baking Powders.
3d.—Alum Baking Powders.

The Commission explains that the best baking powder is that which, the ingredients being healthful, gives off the largest amount of leavening gas and leaves the smallest amount of residuum in the bread. A small amount of carbonate of ammonia, which is considered healthful, is used in some of the cream of tartar powders to give them a higher strength. The Commission says that alum is undoubtedly a hurtful salt. The report ranks the powders and shows the amount in each of inert resultants, which in using it would appear as residuum in the bread, as follows:

Name.	Per Cent. of Leavening Gas.	Per Cent. of Residuum
CREAM OF TARTAR POWDERS—
1. Royal		7.25
2. Dr. Price's		12.66
3. Pearson's		14.39
4. Clevelands		19.18
5. Snow Drift		17.74
6. Upper Ten		[illegible]
7. Delland's		32.52
8. Sterling		12.63
PHOSPHATE BAKING POWDERS—
9. Horsford's		30.49
10. Wheat		56.[illegible]
ALUM BAKING POWDER—
11. Empire		34.26
12. Gold		30.34
13. Veteran		27.[illegible]
14. Cook's Favorite		34.92
15. Sun Flower		49.[illegible]
16. Kenton		38.17
17. Patapsco		40.08
18. Jersey		16.05
19. Buckeye		27.[illegible]
20. Peerless		26.[illegible]
21. Silver Star		[illegible]
22. Crown		55.02
23. Crown Special		26.[illegible]
24. One Spoon		58.68
25. Wheeler's No. Eight		27.53
26. Carleton		30.34
27. Gem		36.72
28. Solio		18.35
29. Zipp's Grape Crystal		11.99
30. Forest City		34.64

The large amount of inert matter or residuum in both the phosphate and alum powders will be noted. This in the phosphate powders is largely of lime; in the alum powders it is chiefly alum. It will be gratifying to the public to observe that the powder in most general use, the Royal, is also the purest. In comparing the first two powders on the list, for instance—the Royal and Dr. Price's—the inert matter in Price's is seen to be about five in seven more than in the former, a difference of 71.87 per cent., the Royal being purer than Price's by a corresponding figure.

The carbonic or leavening gas produced by the powders indicates their strength; and their true value may be ascertained by considering the amount of this gas in connection with their inert matter or residuum as shown above. The higher the percentage of gas and the lower the percentage of residuum the better the baking powder. These percentages, as found in some of the most familiar powders, are given as follows:

Name.	Per Cent. of Leavening Gas.	Per Cent. of Residuum
Royal	11.80	7.25
Sterling	11.00	12.63
Price's	10.50	12.66
De Land's	10.00	32.52
Gem, Alum	8.45	36.57
Forest City, Alum	7.80	24.04
Kenton, Alum	6.20	38.17
Patapsco, Alum	6.90	40.08
Empire, Alum	5.80	34.26
Cook's Favorite, Alum	5.80	34.92
One Spoon, Alum	5.75	58.68

With the foregoing explanation the study of these figures will readily give consumers a knowledge of the comparative value of the different brands. To illustrate with the percentages given the two powders before compared, the Royal containing 11.0 parts of leavening gas to 10.5 in Price's, its excess of strength is 1.3 in 10.5, or 12.4 per cent. Royal is therefore 12.4 per cent. stronger, as well as 71 per cent. purer than Price's, etc. The relative strength and purity of all the powders can be computed in like manner.

THE STRANGE HEARSE-DRIVER.

A Remarkable Dream and Its Verification Related by a New York Lady.

The following facts were related by a Philadelphia lady of culture, who could to-day, if she wished, call upon the fair dreamer in New York city.

The first night on which the vision appeared [illegible] and damp, and a heavy fog enveloped the town. The sleeper had passed the midnight hour when down the street came, or seemed to come, a hearse drawn by two gray horses. The bearded driver was clad in "dreadnaught" and a black hat was pulled well down on his head. He leaned forward as if in deep thought, and no noise was made by the lone and coffinless burial carriage. The horses pranced noiselessly on the stones. As the strange team was passing the house the driver lifted his head and rested his eyes on the windows of the room where the dreamer lay. He stretched out his hands at the same time, and in a hoarse voice called out, "Come!" The expression on his face was that of terrible distress. The vision slowly melted away, and peaceful sleep again possessed the lady.

In the morning she awoke with the dream clearly photographed on her mind. She related it to the household, the inmates thinking it a singular vision. The same thing occurred the second night. On the third, however, the monotony of the dream was broken, the driver of the hearse lifting his hat as he passed the windows. This showed a frightful wound on his forehead, the blood of which seemed sallow and did not flow.

The lady's friends then declared her vision something unusual, and it began to be whispered about.

The dreamer, not long after, had occasion to call on a [illegible] elevator [illegible] and was [illegible] personal matters [illegible] that a man of [illegible] and the elevator boy were [illegible] passengers. The man's face was wrapped in a gray [illegible] and wore a [illegible] beard and black hat. His presence made [illegible] her work [illegible] upon her that it was the [illegible] of her mysterious visitor. She grew nervously sick and [illegible] his wild eyes on [illegible] she had [illegible] Finally [illegible] got her [illegible] the next [illegible] something, and looked for help. Suddenly the car and its [illegible] with a [illegible] swiftness, a [illegible] fell from the shaft, and the car stopped on the pit floor with a mighty [illegible] that shook the building. Men [illegible] and children with [illegible] around to watch and see the [illegible] of a man [illegible] The [illegible] was [illegible] the [illegible] from [illegible] the vision [illegible]

THE BANANAS OF COLOMBIA

There Are Sixteen Kinds of Them, Some of Which Are Sixteen Feet Long.

In Colombia [illegible] kinds of [illegible] to the banana. The common plantano grows from five feet to sixteen inches long, and is an indigenous plant. The dominico never grows more than ten inches. It is a very fine plantano, and its name is derived from its native place, Dominica. The martin, the smallest of the three varieties of the common plantano is the one well known here as red banana. The common guinea, is also an indigenous fruit and grows as large as the red banana [illegible] apple guinea, when in full size, is only six inches, and the smallest one is the fig of Guinea. The name of this suggests its taste, which is like that of an American apple. It is supposed to have originated in Guinea. The English banana is the one ordinarily used in this country. It is so called because it originated in England's domain. The French guinea is small and red and is a native of Martinica. All these guineas are of a green color first, and become gradually yellow as they ripen. The common plantano and the dominico are like in all respects except in size and thickness, and both are of universal use among the Spanish-speaking people. When they are green or yellow the people of Colombia roast, boil, or fry them. They supply the place of bread and vegetables. They are used in soup, and mixed with milk and eggs, are made into fritters. When green the people cut them into four slices and dry them in the open sun. When dried a meal is made from them, which is ordinarily used to make gruels and fritters. When they are ripe they are served as fruits usually. In this condition they are roasted in the skin, and when done a mush is made of them and eaten in milk. They are also preserved with sugar and served as dessert. When thoroughly ripened and at the point of being spoiled, they are passed through hot water and placed in the open air for two or three weeks. There they become nicely preserved, and ready for use on the dinner table. Words fail me to praise worthily a product that actually constitutes the staple food of many millions of people in South America. The best authors of these countries have written many beautiful poems on the merits and usefulness of the plantano alone.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Agent A. J. Sutton, at this writing, is suffering terribly with an attack of rheumatic fever.

Uncle Thomas Allison, who for many years past has been in feeble health, is at present quite sick with but little hopes of recovering.

Joseph, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Palmer, after a few days sickness with scarlet faver, died Saturday afternoon. The funeral services were held at the house Monday. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of the entire neighborhood in their sad affliction.

F. E. Pocklington has been improving the beauty of his residence on West street by erecting a fine porch on the front view. D. R. Wiggins did the carpenter work.

Is it not time some arrangements were on foot towards preparing a suitable service for the 20th anniversary of the erection of the M.E. church. A very pleasant and profitable time might be spent at that time if a little effort was put forth. We hope by another week to be able to give some information on the scheme.

Mrs. J. L. Huston visited relatives in Macon Saturday.

Will Allen, who is night operator at Tecumseh, is at present filling agent Sutton's office.

Several from the village went to Tecumseh, Monday, to hear the Silver Lake Quartette singers, and a much larger number were kept away from the evening meeting by the rain.

A certain citizen on North street has a hen's egg that measures 6x7½ inches in circumference, and says the egg can be seen by calling at his residence.

Grace Birch of Adrian, visited Clara Temple the fore part of the week.

Ezra Ellis of Dundee, called on friends in the village last week.

We see by a statement in the Gratiot Journal of mortgages held in other counties on Gratiot County real estate, that Lenawee takes the lead by several hundred. The number of mortgages are 656, and the total amount is $398,470. Does not speak very bad for old Lenawee.

Don't forget the ladies church social the coming Friday evening at the home of Mrs. Sarah Rappleye. A musical and literary program is being prepared for the occasion and it is hoped there will be a good attendance.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Doctor T. C. Adam is repairing his house and will repaint it.

Chas. Potts and family of Toledo, O., spent a few days visiting John and Frank Jenkins the past week.

J. B. Hause is painting his house.

We understand there are to be some material improvements on Chicago street the coming season.

A. Will Muir has been quite ill the past week.

Mr. John L. Tuttle and children are still visiting in Flint.

Several of Ed. Semarks men left Wednesday noon for Claireview by the overland route.

Wm. Price is building a house on his place in the east part of town.

Chas. W. Parker is quite sick in Detroit with inflammatory Rheumatism. So much so as to be unable to be moved.

Mrs. Smalley and Jennie moved back to Manchester this week.

D. Woodward visited the county seat Wednesday.

Prof. Travis and sister-in-law, Miss Marian Allen, went to Hudson Wednesday noon.

Doctor Reeves and wife are visiting Sylvanus Howell's people.

Mrs. Henrietta B. Keyser having purchased a house in Tecumseh is moving there this week, where she expects to reside.

The Congregational social at A. Roll's Wednesday eve. was largely attended.

Mrs. Mary Codling is nursing the sick at Manchester.

Mrs. Kate Field has so far recovered from her sickness that she returned to her home in Tecumseh Monday.

Will P. Hamilton came over from Detroit, Saturday, and remained until Tuesday.

David Hamilton and C. G. Brownell of Detroit, attended the annual meeting of the stockholders of the woolen manufacturing company, Monday of this week.

At the Stockholders meeting of the Woolen Co., Monday, a dividend of three per cent was declared for six months, which is a good showing, as they are but nicely started again.

Prof. Travis returned from Chicago the last of the week.

Ed. Clark is working for Mrs. Frank Kies.

D. St John enjoyed a visit from his brother and wife of Brooklyn the last of the week.

Mrs. Marjory Rose is spending the week with her sister, Mrs. Alvord, in Detroit.

Chas. Goodrich returned Monday from an extended visit only to prepare for his departure; he left Wednesday for Marshall, where he intends spending the summer.

Fred Field spent Sunday with his family here.

Born—To Mr. & Mrs. W. D. VanTuyle, Tuesday morning, a nine pound son. Mother and son doing nicely.

Geo. W. Freese returned from Carson City the last of the week.

Miss Libbie Jacobs came over from Claireview Friday for a two week's visit with her people.

Wig Codling is visiting his friends here this week for the first time since he went to Claireview.

Ed. Semark is at Clairview where he is building a house for Geo. S. Davison his farm that John T. Clark's familty will occupy.

Several young men from Tecumseh came up horseback Friday afternoon and indulged in racing on Chicago street to the extent that an officer administered a sharp rebuke.

Old Mrs. Halladay has been quite sick the past week.

The play to be given for the benefit of the Blue Ribbon club will be presented at Town Hall, next week Friday evening, March 20th.

Another very sudden death occurred Wednesday evening—Mr. A. D. Mead. He was apparently in his usual health working at his trade during the day. About 8 o'clock he seemed to be in distress and Dr. John Tuttle was called who endeavored to ascertain his trouble but suddenly he threw back his head and he was dead, probably, heart disease. Mr. Mead was over 70 years of age.

The services at St. John's Episcopal Church last Sunday were very largely attended. In the morning Rev. G. E. Peters preached and administered the sacrament of baptism to three adults. In the evening Bishop Harris preached and administered the rite of confirmation to a class of four adults. Mrs. Grace Smith, Mrs. Minnie Hard, Miss Mame Bradner and Miss L. Carmer. At this service the church was filled to its utmost capacity and many were unable to find standing room. The Bishop's sermon, the subject of which was Faith, was listened very attentively to by all, and notwithstanding being so crowded, they were loath to have the sermon brought to a close.

Last Saturday morning our citizens where greatly agitated when it became known that our community had been visited by burglars, and the residences of John Hause, Port C. Smith and W. S. Kimball's the ones selected. Whoever it was they were undoubtedly experts, as everything was done in systematic manner. They would insert an instrument in the key hole, catch the key and turn in and then walk in. At John Hause's they got $25 in money. At Port Smith's nothing was taken, but Mrs. Smith received a terrible fright, as she was awakened by a noise and saw the burglar ransack drawers and boxes. She, with the children were down stairs, while Port and W. V. Fisk were sleeping upstairs. She did not dare to move or scream, and often she could have touched him. She thinks she could identify him. Says he was about Port's size, wore a brown stiff hat, had a small shawl over the lower part of his face and had drawn down over his eyes. The baby getting uneasy he beat a hasty retreat. At W. S. Kimball's he was frightened away by Mrs. Wood, mother of Mrs. Kimball, who hearing some one moving below stairs called out. In the morning they found the door standing open. Mr. Kimball was away from home.

MACON MUSIC.

The spring term of school began on Monday last after a two weeks vacation.

Rev. Mr. Moon of Hillsdale, will hold services at the Baptist church on Sunday morning, April 15th.

Phillip Hornbaker moved into Mrs. Martha Harriott's house last week.

Fluna Cotton spent Wednesday and Thursday of last week at Tecumseh visiting her friend Gertie Howell.

Mrs. May Harrison of Ridgeway, and Anna Smith of Britton, were the guests of Helen Travis and Percis Rumer on Wednesday and Thursday of last week.

Silas Austin has Again returned to Ann Arbor to have his foot treated; his disease is one of long standing, but hope it may terminate for the best.

A short time ago Charles Decker of Clinton circulated a paper to procure names for a library association here, desiring the names of 50 people to organize a union. We understand it was very generally signed.

ONSTED ODDS.

Gentle spring has come.

About time to hang out your hammocks.

After two weeks of vacation Mr Wood resumed school here last week.

Mr. A. J. Woodard is building a small house just north of his residence for his son George and family.

Fred Glenn thinks some of going to France and learn to eat horse steak and frog soup.

Mr. M. O. Aldrich don't consider himself a very sharp business man but as he wanted to get his daughter a first class instrument he was sharp enough to buy a Wilcox and White organ of Mr. W. C. Sharp of Brooklyn and now thinks he has an instrument and recomends Mr. Sharp to any one that intends to purchase an instrument in the organ line.

Charlie Hawkins has bought a brand new carriage so girls keep a sharp look out for him.

Miss. Cornelia Curtis of Olivet, Eaton Co. visited friends in this locality last week.

Phebe Glenn has been quite ill of late.

The Cambridge wool growers and sheep breeders association will hold their annual shearing on May 1st at C. W. Greenleaf's this year.

Mrs. Phileman Riley the middle aged lady that has been failing so long with cancer of the stomach and of which we have previously spoken of in our items was buried last Saturday. The funeral was conducted by Rev. Mowry at the church here and the remains laid in the cemetery near by. She was known as a very kind woman and was always ready to do her best in helping others in trouble and distress.

Charlie Hilton of Rollin village is rusticating with friends in this vicinity at present.

Will Baker has returned from Gratiot Co., where he has been attending school during the past winter.

Edwin Taylor has invested $15 in a Jersey calf and visions of rich butter flit through his mind.

The church here has been very nicely papered the work being done by Frank Jenkins' the paper and work costing $70.

The two year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilmer Knapp was buried on Tuesday of last week. The little fellow was a very bright and intelligent child and the neighbors all sympathise with the bereaved parents.

The Cambridge Sunday School Institute will be held at the church here on Saturday afternoon and evening April 14th. and all are invited to attend. The programe is as follows

HOLLOWAY HASH.

The residence of L. V. Judson was burned last Friday, and it was only by prompt action that the barn was saved. Insured in Farmer's Mutual.

G. L. Hoxsie is again in our midst, after a trip through Tennessee, Georgia, Kentucky, and Arkansa. He reports the weather warm and everything in fine shape.

At the present writing Edmond Hall and Lafin Kelley are very Sick, and some fears for their recovery are entertained.

A passenger train was partially derailed at this station Friday April 6, and remained in that condition until an engine could be had from Adrian to put it on its base. The accident was probably caused by the carelessness of both the brakeman and engineer.

Quite a number of the young people from this neighborhood started to school at Raisin Valley the fore part of the week.

Geo. Hoxsie and Lynn Barrett made a trip to Palmyra and Blissfield the fore part of this week. They report things just as dead there as in "Old Holloway."

Addie Bethel made her parents living at Willis, a short but pleasant visit one day last week. Her sister Alice attended to the duties of the station at this place during her absence.

Jno. Campbell returned Saturday, April 7th, from a sojourn through Manchester, Clinton and numerous other states. He delivered a tooth on the way which he had contracted to a dentist in Manchester.

Quite a severe storm visited this vicinity one day last week. Although it did no great damage in this place, it succeeded in breaking any amount of window-glass about two miles south of here.

IF SO, WHY SO; IF NOT, WHY NOT?

A great many proprietary preparations are simply very convenient forms of administering a well known remedy. One value of patent medicines is that they save the expense of the visit of a doctor. Another merit is that if the patient follows the advice printed upon the label he rarely suffers an injury. The medicine may not cure but at least it does not kill. The same cannot be said of the prescriptions that are sometimes ordered by physicians. Suppose a man who lives by day labor has pain in his shoulder or his back and one of his fellow workmen tells him to use Salvation Oil for he has himself tried it with beneficial results. The poor man gets the liniment and uses it, and is speedily cured. He has done well! He has saved a doctor's bill! Suppose another should be suffering with dyspepsia, constipation, or diarrhœa and on recommendation of a friend should take Laxador, the golden specific for all this class of ailments, and should, as he undoubtedly would, be cured in a short time, has he not done a good thing for himself? These patent medicines are just such prescriptions as first-class physicians might order, and far better than those of inferior doctors. There are several patent medicines that have gone on year after year widening the circle of their patrons and friends until now their names have become 'household words' and no amount of cavil can shake people's confidence in them. They have become the property of the people, and can be found in every well ordered household. Prominent among them may be mentioned Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, whose virtues are second to none, which has achieved a reputation as broad as the continent. It has received the endorsement of men of the highest character, whose veracity is unquestioned. These men, who are well known in their respective neighborhoods, testify over their signatures to the virtue and efficacy of this remedy. They may sometimes be mistaken like other men but they cannot knowingly certify falsely. They are fairly entitled to their opinions, and are to be respected for expressing them; and the public are justified in believing them so far as to give the preparation a fair trial. Col J. Armoy Knox, of the Texas Siftings, the well-known humorous lecturer, had to speak sometime since to a New York audience. The Colonel is a man of commanding appearance and naturally was desirous of "astounding the natives" in this new field of his labors. But the Colonel had a severe cold, and what was worse, he was very hoarse. How was he to "whoop it up?" What was he to do? Like Jack, the giant-killer, the Colonel is fertile of expedients, and always equal to the emergency. He bethought himself of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, of which he had heard so much, and he determined to try it. He did so, and his voice on that occasion was as clear as a bell, and when we say he equaled himself, and it was all due to Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, we say all that need be said of either. But let him speak for himself.

"I had to lecture in Steinway Hall, New York, the other night, but was afraid the severe cold and hoarseness I was then suffering from would so weaken me from speaking, is more correct, I appeared on the platform, I began using Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. On the night of the lecture I had no symptoms of my having had a cold. I am so pleased with the effects of your remedy that I send you this voluntary testimonial of its efficacy.

J. Armoy Knox.

TARIFF REFORM IN IOWA.

"Should Mr. Cleveland run as Mr. Cleveland, or simply as the Democrat he candidate, he would be swamped by at least 15,000 majority, but if he runs as the exponent of the principles set forth in his message he can carry the state easily, and especially if his friends in congress do not conspire to injuriously work Mr. Randall. Unless circumstances speak we will have a campaign national issues this fall, with less of party and less of a personal character than usual, and the majority for the tariff reform ticket will depend upon the degree in which the great agricultural districts, especially the farming region, is made the main battle ground of the campaign. Neither the Democratic committee, as such, can carry Iowa, but the principles of equality, of limiting taxation to good needs, with no favored classes, can carry Iowa against any candidate opposed to tax reduction.

"Let us presume that Mr. Allison is the candidate. How then would Iowa stand?

"That is a violent presumption. Mr. Blaine, and not Mr. Allison, is the choice of a great majority of Iowa Republicans. The 'thin houses' which almost universally greet Mr. Allison in his stumping tours show that his wonderful popularity is not with the masses of his own party, but with the politicians. Of course, with an Iowa man as a candidate state pride would kindle an artificial enthusiasm, and as Republicans dare not meet us squarely on the tariff issue they might partially succeed in drowning our argument with noise and degrading the national campaign into one of local personalities. But upon the open, square issue of tariff reform Cleveland can beat even Allison in Iowa."

ARBOR DAY PROCLAMATION.

A quarter of a century has passed since, in a quiet green valley of Pennsylvania, the name of Gettysburg was made forever memorable, and its hard-fought victory turned the balance, in which hung the Nation's life. The monuments now being erected there, to mark the position of our regiments in that awful contest, signify but little of Michigan's enduring gratitude to the Union soldiers on every field. Memory and reverence for their battle-bought honors, with increasing volume, shall come as they go. Knowing the loyalty of our people, their willingness to add blessings for their children and to associate with them lofty and patriotic sentiments, I do hereby appoint Friday, April 20th, as Michigan's Arbor day. And may the trees planted upon that day be in memory of and its monuments to the brave defenders of our nation. Let the resting place of the sleeping ones, whether known or unknown, be unforgotten, and those who yet remain in the broken ranks and live with us seeing life be remembered. This done, and when the last veteran has gone, when a century and more shall have passed, historic monuments shall beautify our State and breathe to the generations that rest in their shadows of our free patriotism and the price of liberty.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the great seal of the State of Michigan to be affixed at Lansing the 3rd day of April, in the year of our Lord, [illegible] C. G. LUCE.

By the Governor,

G. K. CLIMUN, Secretary of State.

Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

Most everything in this world is full of deceiving. Few things are what they seem, but the results obtained for Dr. Jaques' Red Cover Tonic far exceed all claims. It restores lost nerve force, cures dyspepsia, and all stomach, liver, kidneys and bladder troubles. It is a perfect tonic, appetizer, blood purifier, a sure cure for ague and malaria diseases. Price 50 cents. At Dr. Geo. Ferguson.

A Dressmaker's Experience.

DEAR SIR—As Mr. Hagan, the druggist, tells me I am a sample of your remedy, I have used it off and on during the past three years. It carried me safely through the critical period of discharge of the with a sick baby and it did great things for me in many ways.

SHOOTING ALLIGATORS.

Hunting Scaly Game on the Withlacoochie River.

We spent the night at Mr. Dawey's on Tenla Aseqha [illegible], and left this morning in a cracker wagon for Hawkin's [illegible] where we arrived about [illegible] when we arrived [illegible] a skiff with a man to row, and Prof. R. being the fighter, sat in the [illegible] with the Winchester. We were to be taken six miles [illegible] and alligators were [illegible] than a [illegible] the bank [illegible] the tassels [illegible] growing in the water and I stood upright behind the [illegible] the gun and pulling [illegible] and [illegible] the gator was sinking. He went to the bottom under some tree tops, and, although we could feel him, we could not get him out, and he was really dangerous to our boat. We marked the spot, so that in a few days, when he rises, the boatman can secure his skin and teeth worth from $2 to $3. We went on and I soon spotted another, but it was Prof. R.'s turn to shoot, and I handed over the gun. The first shot entered his spine, and he beat my gator for tumbling around. It was as if twenty snakes were turning, twisting and flopping. We hurried up to him, and Prof. R. put three more balls into him, as he was tangled in brush and vines and could not sink. We finally captured him after a big fight, and were fairly drenched with excitement. We got him out on the ground, measured him fair and square, and found him just nine feet long. We cut off his head, one fore paw, and much regretted that we could not stop to skin him. So we started out again, and in less than ten minutes Prof. R. sighted one looking round the roots of a big live oak. He heard us, and turned his head down into the water. I split his back the first pop. Then the music began to play. He waltzed around among the cypress knees, but he raised not into the water and sunk to the bottom and nothing we had could reach him. Now, I know it would sound bigger if I would write that we got them, but such is not the case. We afterward shot and missed three or four the ones. You must remember, however, that we were going up stream, making noise and hurrying to reach a steamboat landing. We had no [illegible] but the gun. I forgot to mention that my first gator was about eight feet long and the last one an immense fellow fully eleven feet in length.

THE GERMAN EMPEROR.

His Kindness of Heart—His Sport with Small Boys While Bathing.

A Berlin correspondent writes: "Years ago I happened to be swimming in the river near Cologne when a [illegible] of the emperor's [illegible] came down upon us with a terrific splash, greatly disturbing the [illegible] of old father Rhine. I noticed immediately the heir to the Prussian and German thrones, a passionate sportsman alike in the field as on frozen water. Striking [illegible] full length and striking out with extraordinary vigor, he made several circuits of the extensive basin and presently began to drive in the most [illegible] fashion. He would skim along the [illegible] with a [illegible] the delighted youngsters and [illegible] [illegible] with [illegible] he would plump into the [illegible] and [illegible] about and the exultant shouts of the [illegible] [illegible] Where are he? At last, the boys [illegible] and dressing with the utmost expedition, stood awaiting the prince as he emerged from his cabin. Approaching their hearty cheers, and [illegible] terms from those who [illegible] a high [illegible] as in a less station of life, the [illegible] prince invited the [illegible] to the Apollo restaurant and treated them to the whole lot.

A Peculiar Case.

Mrs. Anna Fields, [illegible] was a day or two ago [illegible] and [illegible] gifted with a [illegible] for some time [illegible] death. She had only told her daughters of the illness of several relatives, [illegible] off. Late on the night of the double tragedy near the Camden City Hall she raised herself in bed and grew greatly excited, crying: "There's a man and a woman and a carriage near the City Hall. Something has happened and there is great confusion." It was some time before she could be quieted, and the next morning her daughters were struck with astonishment on reading of the double murder which took place at the hour their mother spoke of the affair.

People ask what is good for a cough or a cold, the mistake many make is in letting it run too long. Dr. Bigelow's Cough Cure, contains the good qualities of all the best cough remedies without the defects of any of them. A safe and speedy remedy for coughs, colds and all throat and lung troubles. Sold by Dr. Geo. Ferguson at 50 cents and $1. bottles. Healing to the lungs. Safe and pleasant for children.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, lazy, and, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "emptiness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, floating specks before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flashes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from the most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, in hopeless fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizer, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up flesh and strength. In malarial districts this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and Kindred Diseases.

DARING AND SUFFERING.

A Narrative of the Andrews Railroad Raid into Georgia in 1862.

A Novel Heroic and Tragic Episode of the Civil War.

Full and Accurate Account of the Journey to the Heart of the Confederacy, The Capture of a Train by a Confederate Camp, the Chase That Followed, and the Fortunes of the Leader and Party.

Look for the daring of its inception, the magnitude of a romance; while in the almost overwhelming results it sought and achieved it was absolutely sublime.—REPORT OF GENERAL HOOD'S OFFICIAL RECORDS.

The most daring project laid scheme, and on the most tragic termination it shows what a band of men can do when under the leadership of a man of Yankee combination.—ATLANTA (GA.) CONSTITUTION.

As a piece of tragic termination it shows what a band of men can do when under the leadership of a man of Yankee combination.—HISTORY OF THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA, Vol. 2, p. 181.

BY WILLIAM PITTENGER,
A MEMBER OF THE EXPEDITION.

From the window where I was I could see the jail. In a short time all the force of the place, including a regiment of cavalry, was drawn up in front of the jail. I heard Col. Lee directing the pursuit. He was in a towering passion, and shouted out his orders in a very unkind tone. Said he: "Don't take one of the villains alive. Shoot them down and let them lie in the woods." He ordered pickets to be placed at the ferries of the Chattahoochee, along the railroads and at all cross roads. I was glad to hear such arrangements, for these were the very places we had agreed to avoid!

All night long the guard talked over their adventures. There was a hammock belonging to one of the prisoners in the front room, and this he kindly permitted me to occupy. It was suspended right before the window, and I could hear and see much that was going on. The guards had their reserve around a camp fire close by, and I could hear their discussion of their parts in the affray. Generally they lauded their own bravery to the skies, telling how they had served the prisoners who had broken out upon them. Occasionally one who had been present then would suggest that it did not show a great deal of bravery to let unarmed men snatch their guns from them, but such hinted slanders were always received with the contempt they deserved, and the work of self praise went on. One wondered at the speed of the Yankees who had been kept in prison so long. Another, of a philosophical turn of mind, accounted for it by saying that they had received so much practice in running away in all the battles they had fought, that it was no wonder they were fleet of foot! This sally received prodigious applause!

This was a doleful night. As I heard one after another of the guards tell how he had shot one of the prisoners, how another had been wounded and had no doubt crawled off somewhere to die, and speak of the great preparation for the search, it did seem very doubtful whether any would survive.

CHAPTER XXVI.

JOURNEYING TO THE UNION LINES.

The next morning the jailer put me back in the room I had occupied with the remainder of my comrades. I was much amused when he told me that a man had put his hand over his mouth and nearly smothered him, but he added, with great seeming satisfaction: "I bit his finger terribly, and gave the rascal a mark he will carry to his grave." However, he had not bitten as severely as he supposed, as I had received only a slight scratch that healed in a week or two. I had always been rather a favorite with him, and he had no suspicion that I was the guilty person, as his fright had prevented him from observing anything closely. He spoke in strong complaint of the ingratitude of our companions, saying that he had been kind to them, and this was the return he got for it. While we remained with him he watched more closely, though he supposed he was flattering us by saying that he had no doubt the men who had gone off were much worse than we.

Some time in the forenoon several officers came to see us in no mild humor, and one roughly demanded the course our boys intended to travel. I had no delicacy whatever about giving the information. I even took a good deal of pleasure in telling him that they had said that Atlanta was in the middle of what was left of the Confederacy, and that they were going to travel toward the outside! The officer was so well satisfied with this information that he asked no more questions!

But it was a heavy dose to ask upon which our brave boys had run out on my statement to the marshal was literally correct, though it took a little of little use to him. I ranked back upon what they did without thinking that in dangers encountered and obstacles overcome, the proudest exploits of Livingstone or Stanley were not superior.

A which volume would be required for the adventures in detail of these different parties, but some incidents seem needful for the completeness of our story. The different narratives have been furnished me for publication by the parties themselves, or are compiled and revised from accounts published by them, some very near the time of the return of the fugitives. The story in outline was of such extraordinary character that local newspapers were glad of the privilege of laying it before their readers. These different accounts have been carefully compared, and any paragraphs which have only passing or local interest have been omitted.

The first story is that of our engineers, and is furnished by Knight, with a few additional items by his companion, Brown. They were the foremost of the whole party in the run for the woods, as they had been in attacking the guard. Knight says:

We started for the woods that were about a mile distant. We ran through gardens or anything else that came in the way, kicking the pickets off several garden fences as the easiest way to get over them. To say we were tired out when we reached the woods does not half express our condition. The woods was but narrow, and we only stopped there long enough to catch our wind, and then pressed on again. Mason, Dorsey and Hawkins were now with us. We next entered a big field, in the middle of which was a deep ravine with brush growing up in it. Here we rested and took our bearings, and then traveled on. Mason now began to get sick, but we worked him along till dark; then through the night we moved along slowly, secreting ourselves a good share of the time.

During the day we hid, but some men caused us to change our position once or twice to avoid them. The second night we also made but little progress, on account of Mason's sickness, and after hiding all day again, we still found him no better. We held a constitution, Mason urging us to leave him to his fate and save ourselves. But we decided not to leave him in the woods alive.

We selected a house that was on a little cross road between two main roads, about a mile apart, and with woods near. So Brown and I went to the house and asked for lodging, telling the man that one of our number was sick. He did not wish to keep us, but we told him we were going to stay, as we could go no further. He yielded and gave us our supper. Mason was put to bed, and we staid up with him part of the night, and then went to bed ourselves and had a good sleep. We had not yet determined what to do, but we ate our breakfast in a back kitchen, and then went into the large house to get our hats. Just then three men walked in. They talked a little time about the weather and the war, and we began to edge toward the door. They asked us if we had not broken jail in Atlanta. We told them that we had. Then they ordered us to surrender, saying that the ferries and roads were all guarded, and that part of our comrades had been shot down in the woods, and that they had come to take us. Brown said: "No, we won't; now you see if we do." We jumped out of the back door and made for the neighboring wood, jumping the fence and running like two deer. They ran out at the front door and round the end of the house, calling, "Halt, halt!" but we did not halt. We had no choice but to abandon Mason, who was taken back to Atlanta the same day. We undertook to cut across the road to get in behind them, as we feared to cross the open plantation; but we failed and had to take the risk. The old fellow with whom we had stayed turned his hounds loose and put them on our trail. We had a big hill to go down and then one to go up before we could reach the woods. We put in our best licks, and could hear the hounds coming their best. We got down the hill and across the flat, and were climbing the hill, when we saw that the hounds were about to overtake us, and we prepared for battle by stopping in a stony place and getting a pile of rocks ready. We waited for them to come close up, and took them at short range. We rolled them down the hill, and then, as the southerners used to say after a battle, "We won the victory, but we evacuated the ground;" for by this time we could see our three callers coming around the road near by, on horseback, to get ahead of us. We got to the woods as soon as possible, and when we were out of sight changed our course so as to get away from the horsemen. They got part of their hounds rallied so that they would follow along and howl on our track, but they could not be made to close up on us any more. After awhile we would see these horsemen heading us off again, and then we would cut in another direction, and the hounds would give them our course again. About noon we came to a small stream of water. We plunged into that, and would stoop down and take up our hands full of water and drink as we ran. We kept in the bed of that stream for a couple of hours, and then the hounds lost track of us. Soon after we reached Stone mountain, about eighteen miles east of Atlanta, and went on the north side of it and concealed ourselves in the grass till dark, when we picked out the north star and traveled by it.

For twenty days we traveled by night and hid by day. Each day, for several days, we could see them after us, sometimes with dogs. For six days after we left Mason we were without a bite to eat save what the woods furnished, such as nuts, bark, buds, etc. On the seventh day we were going along a little stream that had willows on both sides, and which ran through a field we wished to cross, as there were mountains on the other side, and we thought we could get on their slope, and be traveling in the day time. We had great good fortune here, for we found two ears of corn on the bank and a flock of geese in the creek, one of which we captured by means of the corn, and then getting into the mountains we commenced to pick our goose. If anybody ever picked a goose without scalding, they know what kind of a job we had! When we got tired we took each a leg and pulled it in two! then we went along eating our raw goose, taking first a bite of it, then of corn. That goose lasted several days!

On the tenth day we reached the Chattahoochee river. There was a rail fence alongside of the woods; and we took two large rails, crossed them near one end, lashed them fast with bark, and putting our clothes on the highest end, we floated at the other till we got across. We took a good sleep in the thick cane break on the other side.

The next evening we came to a drove of small pigs and began to figure for one. Finally I stood behind a tree with a club; Brown bit off little pieces of apple and pitched to the pigs; and soon one little fellow commenced to pick up the pieces; then Brown kept working backward till he passed the tree where I stood, and when the pig followed up I shot him with my stick! Previous to this we found an iron strap that had fastened a shovel to its handle, and one part of it had been worn thin. This was rubbed up a little on a stone and it made a very good butcher knife. We split the pig, and with each a half ran up the side of the mountain, and waited till dark for a wonderful feast! We could see over the farm where there was a fire burning out in a back field, and we went there and roasted pig most of the night. Then we had one of those feasts you read about! That pig lasted us till we struck the Hiwassee river in the corner of North Carolina. Here we had thought we could run a boat down by night and hide in the day time. But when we saw the river we changed our mind, for it was a swift stream, full of great rocks, where we could not have run a canoe by daylight. But we tried to cross, and I picked out a rock that we intended to reach. I plunged in and missed my rock, as the current swept my feet away while I tried to put my hands on it. I looked to see what had become of Brown after I had got on a flat stone much further down the river than I intended. He was sitting on a stone laughing at me, though I did not see where the laugh came in. He asked me if I want and see if he could get that far down. He started, and landed far below me, and did not feel so much like laughing!

But the tug of war came when we were on the other side, for now we had to cross the mountains which we had been traveling in, to raise before the Union lines. It took two nights and a day to get to the top of it. It was so rough that we were four days going eight miles.

In a deep mountain valley beside a river we met two men armed to the teeth. We all stopped as if we had been shot, but quickly moved on again. We simply spoke when we met, and all seemed glad to get by without anything more to do with each other. Soon we came to a small house on the door of which was fast. We waited a long time to see if anybody came, and as none did, we concluded to investigate it. Brown stood guard, and I climbed down the wide outside chimney and found nothing inside but two ears of corn. I went up the ladder and there was a bed all made up ready for a person to get in. I tumbled down the covers and found in a rifle and all the paraphernalia but powder; and as there was none of that I did not care to take it. But I carried the two ears of corn out of the chimney with me. There was fire in some of the stumps on the mountains and we roasted the corn, and that was our supper. We went down the river a little further and camped for the night.

The next morning we continued down the river, making good progress, for now the trail was better; when suddenly, around a sharp bend, we came to a large house with two men sitting on the porch. We concluded to go up to them and ask how far it was to Cleveland, and maybe we could get something to eat. When we hailed and asked one of the men came down to us and told us it was sixty miles. Then we asked for some dinner, telling him that we were sick soldiers. He said we could have some dinner, but for his part he was opposed to the war. We were, too!

We got to some water and some soap, which improved our appearance a good deal, and finally dinner was ready. There were two ladies, one old and the other young. The old lady was one of the bitterest women we met. While we were down at the table she said she wished the Yankees would get there, so that they could get some Indian coffee. Then I said that I wished so, too. Then she accused us directly of being Yankees ourselves, and as we convinced that these two men could not arrest us anyway, we said that we were Union soldiers, and belonged to the party called "engine thieves." They had all heard of that raid, and now made us welcome indeed. They desired us to stay a week and rest up. We were willing, if we could be secreted somewhere. They told us that they could place us where the "first cousin rebel" could not find us. "I did think that was just where I wanted to go!"

We had a good time, being kept in the back rooms during the afternoon. They put a large sing out on pasteboard, and we read them army stories and sang songs till dark. Finally the dog barked and then stopped. They told us not to be uneasy, as the dogs master was coming. They told him whom they had in the back room, and he came in and took us by the hands, and laughed and cried, and told us some hard tales about his being imprisoned because he was for the Union.

It was now settled that we should stay for a few days. A large basket of grub was prepared, and their boys pretending to be going coon hunting, made ready a large torch. We were to follow a short distance behind, with quilts and provisions. We first went down the river, and then turned up the mountain and went up, up, till I thought we would never get to the top. We turned into another ravine and again went up, up, till we came to a solid wall across our ravine. It looked as if the top of the mountain had slid down and barred the passage. Our guide turned a little to the left, and among the bushes he got down and showed us a hole big enough to crawl in. He entered with his torch and we followed. There was a good sized room in the cave, and he said we could have all the fire we wanted, and also as long as we pleased without danger. It did look as if the Evil One would have quite a task to find us here. Then he gave us countersigns and promised to come again, and left us to enjoy our good fortune alone. We began to eat the provisions brought along, and continued till it was nearly gone. We would eat and lie down, but get hungry again before going to sleep and eat some more. Finally we quit lest our friend should not come back in time, but he did, and brought plenty of food with him.

For five days we were fed and rested in this safe retreat; then our kind friend took us down again to the river and gave us a guide whom we followed over the mountains. After a long time I noticed a light in the woods and that he was making for it. There we found an old house standing alone and surrounded by the forests. When we got to the door my guide opened it, and to my surprise it was full of men. They told us to come in, for we were among friends. We had a good handshake all around, and then one old man asked us if we had any money. We told him we had not. He said that our looks showed that we had no clothes, and turning to the company he said, "We must get them clothes and money, for men cannot travel without them." We were taken to a barn and kept till the next night, and were then given a suit of clothes (this was the first they had received since leaving the Union army) and $10 each, and a guide who was to receive $50 for taking us three nights' journey.

This placed us across the Tennessee river, when we were sent with instructions from one house to another.

This was comparatively easy traveling, and we passed rapidly and safely on till we reached our own lines. We had spent forty-seven days and nights passing over some of the roughest country that ever laid out of doors!

The rough and simple language of this sketch covers a truly heroic achievement. The devotion to their sick comrade, who was, in spite of all, returned to us in prison, and gave an account of their adventures that far, led to their singular battle with the hounds and the still more terrible race in which they escaped from horsemen and dogs.

MARK WOOD. J. A. PORTER. M. Y. HAWKINS.
J. A. WILSON. D. A. DORSEY.

A FEW OF THE ESCAPED RAIDERS.

The eight men who got away from the immediate vicinity of the prison traveled in couples, taking different routes and meeting with a great variety of stirring adventures. Porter and Wollam went westward and reached the Tennessee river, down which they floated in a boat, making a land circuit to avoid mussel shoals, till they reached Corinth, in Mississippi, on the 18th of November, having been a month and two days on their perilous routes.

Dorsey and Hawkins pursued a route similar in general direction to the last, but keeping a little further west. They were entangled in the outposts of Bragg's army, then on its retreat from Kentucky, and very narrowly escaped capture. They also were greatly helped by the Union people of East Tennessee, and without such aid would very probably have died with cold and hunger in the mountains. They and all the others were received by their army comrades and relatives as men risen from the dead.

But far most surprising and longest but easiest journey was that taken by Wood and Wilson. The former was so sick that it is not probable he could in any other way have been saved at all. They struck southwest till they encountered the Chattahoochee river, when, seizing a boat, they paddled down the stream night after night, hiding by day, till they reached the Gulf of Mexico, when they stood boldly out to sea in their frail craft and were fortunate enough to find our blockading fleet. Of their escape on once more beholding the old flag, it is useless to speak; all who were prisoner during the war will understand it, and neighbors can! They reached Key West Nov. 12, and were the first of the party to get the fullest account of their adventures, which is still on file in the war department.

A few words will finish the story of the six of this band who were so unfortunate as to be recaptured. We expected nothing less than instant death; but instead of that we were taken to the Atlanta barracks, then placed in charge of an officer who had been in the regular United States army, from whom we received more humane treatment than had been before accorded us with the lines of the Confederacy. Here we remained two months, and were then forwarded to Richmond, Va. We spent only about two hours in Libby prison, but were more than three months in Castle Thunder, where our sufferings were often very great. Food was but little above the starvation point. No clothes were given us by the Confederacy, and we were almost naked. Many died around us, and in the very rooms with us, of smallpox and other deadly diseases, but our lives were strangely preserved, though several of our number were very sick. We never were called on to face another court martial. There was much talk of exchange, but our hopes in that direction were so often disappointed that we almost ceased to hope.

At length, on the 17th of March, 1863, we received the joyful tidings that a special political exchange had been concluded, which, by the assistance of Secretary Stanton, had been made to include [illegible] we at last found that it was actually true, and that our year of horror was over and we once more under the old flag.

CHAPTER XXVI.

HOMEWARD BOUND.

A little before dark on the evening of the 17th of March we were sitting around the stove, lazily but not unhappily gossiping the stage of Vicksburg, when an officer entered in haste and gave the strange order: "All who want to go to the United States fall into line, and come to the office." There was a rush and a scramble to the middle of the floor, and no line was ever formed more promptly. We all believed that we were already in the United States, but had no objection to be still more so, and it was with a good many questionings that we marched out of the guarded room door, across the courtyard, and as many of us as could enter at once into the office. The proper officers were prepared with blank forms, and they filled out rapidly the oaths of parole binding the signers not to serve against the Confederacy until regularly declared exchanged. Even when I saw this good work progressing I feared that the opportunity was only for others. To test the matter I pressed forward and gave my name, fully expecting to hear, "The engine thieves can't go," but, to my surprise, no objection was made. For a moment a delicious hope thrilled through my veins—a vision of happiness and home, dazzling as a summer flash of lightning, shone forth before my eyes.

With groans and sight, and dizzed eyes,
He seeks the couch and down he lies;
Nausea and faintness in him rise,
Brow-racking pains assail him.
Sick headache! But ere long comes ease,
His stomach settles into peace,
Within his head the throbings cease
Pierce's Pellets never fail him!

Nor will they fail anyone in such a dire predicament. To the dyspeptic, the bilious, and the constipated, they are alike "a friend in need and a friend indeed."

Another Use of Electricity.

Electricity is now being used in Paris to enable persons of wealth at select dinner parties to do without the waiter or the maitre d'hote. A miniature railway is laid down on the dinner table and continued on the same level into the kitchen through an aperture in the wall and an intermediate pantry. Dishes come in and after making the round of the table go out in a sort of small truck moved by electricity. The truck at any moment can be made to stop. It does its work admirably as a dumb waiter, and any amount of art may be lavished on it to give it decorative beauty.

Well Enough to Wait.

It is always advisable to hear the end of a sentence. A literary man, for instance, once said to one of his lady friends: "Will you accept my hand——" Gushing maiden—"Why, er—so sudden—so unexpected." Literary man (proceeding, unmoved)—"Book on political economy?" Somewhat similar is a story told of another couple. He—"How bright the stars are to-night! They are almost as bright as——" She (expecting "your eyes")—"O, you flatter me!" He (proceeding)—"They were last night."

Lost His Smelts.

William Dempsey, of Rondout, N. Y., received a quantity of smelts and pickerel which were frozen stiff. He put them in a barrel of water to thaw out. About three hours later, he went to the barrel and found that the pickerel had thawed back to life, but he could find no smelts. The pickerel had eaten them.

Turned Into Lime.

The marble slabs which form the roof of Girard College, in Philadelphia, have turned into lime through the action of the sulphurous smoke of the anthracite coal burned in the building.

Wonderful Cures

W. D. Hoyt & Co., Wholesale and Retail Druggist of Rome, Ga., says: We been selling Dr. King's New Discovery, Electric Bitters and Bucklen's Arnica Salve for two years. Have never handled remedies that sell as well, or give such universal satisfaction. There have been some wonderful cures effected by these medicines in this city. Several cases of pronounced Consumption have been entirely cured by use of a few bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery, taken in connection with Electric Bitters. We guarantee them always. Sold by C. Beauty in Washington.

Washington Editor—A pretty mess you've made of that ball. What do you mean, sir, by calling Mrs. Redmore "distractingly beautiful?"

New Reporter—You told me I could get all the points I needed from last year's files, and she was called "distractingly beautiful" in every report last season.

"You'd better keep posted on the history of your native country, sir. Last year Mr. Redmore was chairman of the Committee on Public Pap, this year he's on Ventilation and Acoustics, and next the tail end of that.

The "Devil" Did It.

A Montana paper recently contained this remarkable notice: Mr. Charles Johnson and Miss Fanny West were married by Rev. S. Hess on Wednesday. So far no trouble has resulted, and have been informed as to the situation six years will be none. The next day the editor specialized and explained that a part of an item regarding an impending strike had got in the wrong place.

The reason why Acker's Blood Elixir is warranted, is because it is the best Blood Preparation known. It will positively cure all Blood Diseases, purifies the whole system, and thoroughly builds up the constitution. Remember, we guarantee it. C. A. Wright & Co., Druggists.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy free to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their express and post office address. Respectfully,

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.
It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.
The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.
WHAT IT CURES.
All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.
It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.
Over 40 Years.
This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.
Prices 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

TALKS ON TEMPERANCE.

Interesting Speeches at the Opera House last Monday Night—Also some Fine Music.

Notwithstanding the rain, which came down in quite a shower last Monday evening, the opera house was well filled to hear the Silver Lake Quartette and A. A. Hopkins. The quartette is composed of Rev. C. H. Mead, basso conductor; Prof. Theo. E. Chambers, soprano director; Mr. A. H. Lawrence, alto; and Rev. J. D. Tucker, tenor. The two that do the speaking generally are Rev's. Tucker and Mead, but the former's place was supplied by Prof. Hopkins, who does not always travel with them, but arranges the terms and dates.

A meeting was also held in the afternoon which was largely attended by many who could not come in the evening. It was addressed by Mr. Hopkins and with song by the Quartette.

The evening meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. Adkins and singing by the quartette. Their songs were all new and the rich mellow male voices rendered them in a way that excited the greatest enthusiasm among the audience and they were encored again and again. After they had sung three of their most stirring pieces, the first speaker of the evening was introduced in the person of A. A. Hopkins, who gave a strong plea for prohibition and local option, and also some smart raps at the old parties. After giving a synopsis of the program, he said:

PROF. HOPKINS.

To night it rains outside, but is dry and comfortable in here. Are all of us for dry weather here to-night? We may not have another chance to ask you that question or any other in a long time. There is a good deal to say. Be comfortable, patient, and we will have a good time. A political army can become effective in government only through a political party which administers government. I was an advocate of the amendment to your state constitution and gave hard work to that fight. We all gave it honestly. There was not heard in the state of Michigan a Prohibition party speech from a Prohibition party speaker. We spoke for the amendment along the party line. We should keep this question out of the political party arena. You should not make it a party issue. Now what was the effect in Michigan when you had your non-partisan campaign? You could have an amendment to vote and act upon, to discuss in a non-partisan way. You gave it to the people by a non-partisan legislature. Did'nt the Republican party of Michigan claim that it gave the amendment to the people? Is'nt it true? Before you could have a non-partisan measure you had to have a partisan act in the legislature. Well suppose you had carried the amendment. Suppose you had not been counted out, would you not had to have statutory enactments in Michigan? Your amendment to the constitution would have been embodied in the instrument as a fact in statutory enactments by your legislature. In every scheme where a so-called non partisan measure has been passed by the people they have been acts by the legislature. Who makes your legislatures? Parties. Kansas carried the amendment by 7000 majority. What happened. On the morning after the election there was found on the state house steps a foundling. The Democratic party said it was'nt theirs and the Republican party said that is not our party's child; that was born of a non-partisan measure. To be sure we gave the people a non-partisan measure to vote on but we are not going to father it. So the little Prohibition child was left to itself. If, when the prohibition party was born there was a party in this land that was agreed on the principal of prohibition, agreed for the purpose to put prohibition as a fact in government, then I admit to you that the Propibition party had'nt any reason to be born.

The largest portion of the Democratic party is south of the Mason & Dixon's line, and the editor of a Democratic paper asked: Is the Democratic party of North Carolina a prohibition party? No, the Democratic party of N. C. is not a Prohibition party, "Not by a jug full." I thought the answer was very good for it came from a Democratic editor. With all due deference to you ladies' and gentlemen, if I were to put the question to him—is the Democratic party of Michigan a Prohibition party, his answer as an honest man would be "not by a whole barrel full." Well, is the Republican party of this state agreed on the principles of Prohibitions? I would be very glad to have an answer in the affirmative. I think that in N. Y. a Prohibition party. It elected its first governor in the state as a Prohibitionist. Is the Republican party to day in the state of N. Y. agreed on the principles of prohibition? Go and ask the newly elected Mayor of Buffalo and he will say, I think not, sir. Go to N. Y. city, there you will find 55 members of the republican county committee selling liquor behind their own bar. In Brooklyn 20 doing the same. In Cincinnati more than two-thirds of them. Can a party be agreed for the principles of prohibition when there is a large liquor element inside of it. I have heard, within a few days, a great many criticisms of Prohibitionists of Michigan. First of Prof. Dickie, criticising him because he dared to go to Iowa to help the party. The idea of our good brethren is that where there is Prohibition by local option the Prohibition party has no right to be. Let me say this, there can never be a national party without a state party.

What are you going to do with Detroit and the two counties that did'nt carry? What does local option amount to in Michigan if its large cities are allowed to sell liquor? We might do as a minister once said: "The Lord save the country, the cities may go to hell." We are not in favor of accepting local option as the final settlement in any state. If we admit the local option theory we concede possible license.

After music by the quartette, Rev. C. H. Mead was introduced and gave a review of the slavery question and compared it with the present great temperance question. Mr. Mead is a very forcible and entertaining talker and held his audience closely.

TUCKER MEAD.

LAWRENCE CHAMBERS.

Ladies and Gentlemen.—Let me put to you a question. Suppose there should come to this nation from outside a foreign foe, that could strike down 70,000 lives. Take them out of the pulpits, take them out of the professions, take them out of the merchant's store and out of the banks, the rich and the poor and the middle classes and strike them dead. What would you do? What would this great nation of America do? Suppose there should be no such thing as the liquor traffic, what would this nation do? And yet here we are face to face with a great evil. On one side the home, on the other the saloon. When the nation wants to find true men, pure men and honest men, it goes to the homes. When it wants to find its lunatics, its bummers, its outcasts, it goes to the saloons. This is the source of all that is low and devilish and you know it. This battle is one to the death. Either the homes must die or the liquor traffic must die. Here you have two forces on two sides, the right and wrong. 150,000 women banded together with prayer. What is on the other side. The paupers, the drunkards, the gamblers, and the devil and the N. Y. Tribune. Where do you stand? There are two sides and a man who takes neither side is in the wrong. Here are these boys, to-morrow are going to be men, are going to be teachers, professional men or they are going to be gamblers, paupers or outcasts. Every man wants his boy to be a power. You remember in the days gone by; the fight began 40 years ago in this country: On one side liberty, on the other side slavery. On one side God and on the other side the devil. Let us come down to the present day. Here is a modern wrong worse than slavery. It touches north, south, east and west, black and white. It makes our lunatics and paupers. Now then, Democratic party get up into the witness stand. Are you for or against Prohibition? Against it. Republican party put up your hand and swear; are you for or against Prohibition? We are. Are you for the home or the saloon? Certainly. Are you for sober men or drunkards? You bet. Are you for God or the Devil? Every time. History repeating itself. What a judgment is coming against this great nation if we do not put this great curse away. The hand writing is on the wall, the edict has gone forth; liquor traffic, thou must die.

LOCAL OPTION.

Thirty-Five Counties Vote "Dry," and Two Only Vote "Wet."

In the lower peninsula of Michigan, thirty-seven counties have voted under the Local Option law. Thirty-five have voted against the manufacture and sale of liquors, and two, Washtenaw and Iosco, in favor of their manufacture and sale. To present the complexion of the lower peninsula on the temperance question vividly to the eye of Christian Herald readers, we have had the accompanying map engraved, upon which the counties in which Local Option carried, are printed in white, those in which it was lost in black, while counties which have not yet voted are represented by the medium dark. The following table gives the result in these counties compared with the vote of last spring. In the spring the vote was for or against the prohibitory amendment to the constitution. Under the Local Option Law the votes are cast for or against the sale of liquors. In the table, for convenience of reference, the prohibitory vote is, in both cases, put in the affirmative column.

HABITUAL constipation can be entirely cured by the use of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup after all other remedies have failed.

Mother, do you know anything of that Balsam everybody is talking so much about? Do you refer to Hibbard's Throat and Lung Balsam? Yes, that's what I mean. Well, I believe it is the best medicine in the world for a cough, cold or sore lungs, and is so pleasant to take. Your father took a severe cold day before yesterday, and is well to-day.

A BLOOD TONIC.—Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup is the greatest blood purifier in the world. Reason teaches the lesson. Read their formula, found in their medical pamphlet.

ONE BOTTLE CURED HIM.

A. H. Thompson, Rockford, Ill., writes; "I have been troubled with Catarrh for years, nothing helped me until, I tried Dr. Blair's Catarrh Cure. I followed directions and with less than one bottle I am cured." Papillon (extract of flax) Catarrh Cure will positively and permanently cure Bronchial Catarrh, Acute or Chronic Catarrh and Rose Cold and Hay Fever. Large bottle $1.00.

THE GREATEST DISCOVERY

Of the nineteenth century, can truly be said of Papillon (extract of flax) Skin Cure. Thousands testify to its wonderful curative powers in seemingly hopeless cases of Eczema, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas and every kind of skin disease. Mr. O. P. Algier, of Hartford, Ohio, tried everything he heard of or saw recommended and suffered five years with Eczema until he found Papillon Skin Cure, which cured him. Large bottles only $1.00.

Wide Awake for April greets us with eighty pages overflowing with beautiful pictures, delightful stories and poems. Mrs. Sherwood's serial, "Those Cousins of Mabel's" enforces the usages of good society by the experience of the heroines. The frontispiece, "Easter Lillies," is a charming illustration; a lovely girl, her arms filled with the lillies. Your newsdealer has this issue for 20 cents, or it will be mailed by the publishers, D. Lothrop Company, Boston. A sample back number of any of the Lothrop magazines costs but 5 cents.

The best on earth can truly be said of Grigg's Glycerine Salve, which is a sure, safe and speedy cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. Will positively cure piles, tetter and all skin eruptions. Try this wonder healer. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Only 25 cents. Sold by Dr. Geo. Furguson's.

—Do not forget that those well known and popular styles, "The White" and The Domestic sewing machines, and also all kinds of needles or supplies are kept for sale at the lowest prices at M. P. Brown's Art Gallery.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

DEAR MR. WIGGINS:—Please postpone your earthquakes until next season. A Presidential campaign with three full tickets in the field will be enough for this year.

The Young People's Literary of the M. E. church held their regular monthly meeting last evenin . An interesting program was presented. The Society is starting out finely.

The K. of L. held their last dance at their hall last evening. Although the attendance was not large they had a very pleasant party, and those who attended felt well repaid for their trouble.

The Lady's Aid Society of the M. E. church will convene for the regular monthly meeting on Wednesday, April 18th. Business meeting at 4 P. M. Supper served from 5:30 till 7:30 by Mrs. Ide's committee. All are cordially invited.

Miss Nellie Cole will start for Baltimore next Monday where she will make her home with her father. Her place in the telephone office is supplied by Miss Lu Jones, who will undoubtedly operate the "phone" satisfactory to all.

From the Fort Scott Daily Tribune of March 29th, we clip the following item in regard to our old Macon friend Dr. H. D. Baker.

Dr. Baker has entirely renovated and refitted the rooms lately occupied by Dr. Aikman and has removed his office thereto. He has now a suit of the neatest offices in the city. The wood work on the interior is finished in oil and the floors nicely carpeted, and with the addition of some expensive pieces of furniture the Dr. now has one of the neatest and cosiest offices in the city.

The Northern Lenawee Farmers' club will meet at Horatio Kayser's, Wednesday afternoon, April 18th, '88. The program is as follows:

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Where is the street sprinkler?

I. B. Richart went to Toledo to day.

Battle Creek has an Equal Suffrage League.

The Gale Plow has been pretty well advertised this spring.

The Silver Lake quartette beats them all on vocal music.

Stock bills and circulars printed at this office on short notice.

Tom McClure is visiting friends at Flat Rock, Mich., for a few days.

Henry Lovejoy, of Adrian, was in town last Saturday on business.

The Central telephone station is being moved to Marks & Russell's drug store.

Street Commissioner Jordan has done a good work this week cleaning Chicago street.

Bert Tribou, of Detroit, was at home last Sunday. City life evidently agrees with him.

The residence of Volney Judson, in Adrian township burned last Friday. Loss about $3,000.

April showers have certainly come. They make muddy roads but they make May flowers.

Mrs. B. F. Reynolds, Mrs. L. B. Stevens, Mrs. D. P. Anthony and Dora are visiting at Adrian to-day.

The price of coal has dropped twenty-five cents a ton. It will probably drop twenty-five cents more about the 4th of July.

The Co. C. boys held their last dance of the season on Thursday night of last week. The party was a very pleasant one and fittingly terminated a series of much social interest.

When Blissfield holders of gas well stock have a meeting they do no business, but adjourn to the well, uncover it, light a match, and secure a blaze ten feet high—for a minute.

The first big shower of the season occurred last Thursday afternoon. There was a very heavy rainfall accompanied by a high wind that played havoc with signs and shade trees.

The local option map which appears with our temperance column is taken from the Christian Herald of Detroit. It is a good thing to cut out and paste in your scrap book for future reference.

Newton A. Marsh, a whilom Tecumseh boy, is now President and Manager of the Detroit Mutual Benefit Association. He is going South shortly on a prospecting tour and may locate in Georgia or Tennessee.

John J. White, of Clinton, was in town last Saturday. Mr. White is crowded with orders this spring in his merchant tailoring business, and is doing considerable work for surrounding towns. His wife is seriously ill and he fears that she may not recover.

Internal improvements are the order of the day at Baker & Hall's drug store. Three rows of small drawers have been placed along the west side, which will be not only ornamental but useful. Jas. H. Potter did the work.

Our old friend, Capt. Jas. C. Wheeler, of Detroit, is in luck. He not only holds his desk in the office of the Internal Revenue Collector, but he was made doubly happy the other day by the arrival in the family of a twelve pound boy.

The many friends of Will G. Waldby will regret to hear that he is still confined to his room, the result of the exposure and nervous strain, experienced during his recent yachting trip in the south. His condition is undoubtedly quite serious.

The five largest creditors of the O. & M. Coal & Mf'g. Co. bought the property at the Assignee's Sale, and have reorganized the business under the name of the Tecumseh Manufacturing Co. Mr. E. H. Rankin, of Bay City, is the new manager, who is well fitted for that position. The new firm intend to run the business to its fullest capacity.

Everybody is aware of the fact that spring has arrived, but possibly some may not know that a large line of spring styles of hats and bonnets has arrived at Mrs. N. R. Brown's millinery rooms. It includes the torpedo and other new shapes and also the ombre ribbons and flowers to match. Feathers, laces in profusion. Call and inspect the stock.

Rev. Mr. Adkins has in his study a unique piece of furniture. It sits upon an ordinary table and looks like a small book case when closed. It is about 4 by 3 feet in size and one foot in depth. Upon opening it, it discloses several rows of open manilla envelopes strung upon wires, for holding newspaper scraps. Each envelope is marked with the title of the subject matter contained therein and is made by simply folding together a piece of manilla card board about three inches wide and slipping a small rubber band over the top. It is the most systematic method of preserving scraps and clippings we ever saw and is far superior to an ordinary scrap book.

Shall Tecumseh have a base ball club this season?

The Ridgeway base ball club have already opened the spring campaign.

As soon as Morenci is all burned down, the town will buy a fire engine.

The Business Mens' Association starts out nicely. Now let the "business" be pushed.

Manager Bowen has been very busy lately on the Ridgeway and Clinton extensions to the C. T. Line.

Mrs. Smith, of McGregor, Iowa, is enjoying a few days visit at her old home in Tecumseh. She returned this morning.

Mrs. D. P. Spaulding has returned from Chicago and will remain at her old home in Tecumseh. She will have charge of the green house.

The HERALD office will be connected with the Tecumseh and Macon Telegraph line this week. Don't all call at once please until we learn how to manipulate the "critter."

The third quarterly meeting of the Methodist Episcopal church, will be held April 21st and 22d. Rev. T. J. Joslin, Presiding Elder, will be present and officiate at the Sabbath morning services.

"The Beauty of Growing Old," subject of sermon for next Sunday morning, April 15th, at 10:30 at the Universalist church. In the evening at 7:30 by request, Rev. Getchell will repeat the discourse, entitled, "The Discontented."

A Cousin Jerusha Concert, "Ye sing In skule," by the children, at the Opera House, Monday evening, April 23d, under the auspices of The Young People's Society of the Presbyterian church. A program will be presented next week.

A telegram was received last Friday containing the news that Aaron Aten, in the Kalamazoo asylum was not expected to live the day out. His children went to that city Saturday and on Wednesday morning his death occurred. The remains were brought to this village last night, and the funeral will take place to-morrow (Friday) at 2 o'clock, at the M. E. church.

A. O. Abbott, of Hudson and John Graham, of Devil's Lake, were in town yesterday selling lots in the new village. A permanent plat has now been made, and recorded and the most desirable locations are being rapidly taken up. The name of the new resort will be "Manitou Beach." Tecumseh people who desire a lot should take it at once.

The following is copied from an Eastern paper: "At the Clinton St. M. E. parsonage, on March 30th, Rev. T. R. Stratton officiating, Mr. Amos Sheriff, of Hartland, N. Y. and Miss Nettie Wilson, of Raisin, Lenawee Co. Michigan, were united in marriage. Mr. Sheriff is one of Hartland's prominent young men and the son of Thomas Sheriff, one of the energetic business men of that town. The bride is well connected and has a host of young friends who wish her prosperity and happiness in her new home."

Irve Osborn was, until last Friday night, the happy possessor of a fine railroad bicycle. He is now—of what is left. On that eventful night he was returning from Britton via C. J. & M. to Tecumseh about 12 o'clock. At the same time a hand car loaded with men was using the same track going the other way. No light was shown by either party and they attempted to pass. The result was disastrous, especially so to Irve and his bicycle. He was thrown about 15 feet by the shock and remnants of the bi. were picked up all along the route. He was considerably shaken up, but fortunately was not seriously injured.

As Mont Bangs was driving in the village last Saturday evening, his horse became frightened when turning the corner near Wm. Ross' residence on the Adrian road, and made a break for the opposite side of the road without giving due notice of his intentions. Mont and a man named McKendry were thrown out and strewed promiscously over the ground. Mr. McKendry was considerably bruised but not seriously. Mont hung on to the ribbons and after being dragged several blocks managed to stop the animal, not much the worse for wear. The buggy, however, looked as though it had come in contact with a first-class cyclone, or the Kansas species.

At Tecumseh on last Thursday afternoon, April 5th, at 5 o'clock, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Warden, by Rev. J. M. Getchell, Mr. Jos. F. Pomeroy, and Miss Sell M. Warden, were united in marriage. The wedding was private, only the family and a few friends being present. Mr. Pomeroy is engaged in business at Saginaw, this state, as lumber inspector and surveyor. He has been making his home here for a few months. Several nice presents were presented to the bride by her relatives. Miss Belle will be missed from her home and the society in which she mingled. Our best wishes for joy and sunshine we extend to both the bride and groom, and may life be as all of hope and [illegible] these days, as now [illegible]

Battle Creek is already talking up a 4th of July celebration.

The Alger club of Detroit, is doing some lively missionary work throughout the state.

Frank Snedecor has a good job in Fred Gage's barber shop, at 527 Cherry street, Lansing.

Twenty-three years ago last Monday, April 9th, Lee surrendered to Gen. Grant at Appomattox.

Geo. W. Larwill's prize story appears in the Evening News of Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, this week.

Is Tecumseh going to celebrate Decoration Day this year? If so, the arrangements had better be started at once.

There will be preaching at the Baptist church at Macon, next Sunday morning, April 15th, at 11 o'clock by the Rev. Mr. Moon senior.

Attention is called to the prospectus of the Farmer's Voice in another column. It is one of the very best farmer's papers published in the West. Published at 230 La Salle St., Chicago.

Burglars visited this town last Thursday night. Web. Anderson's and A. W. Mill's houses were entered, but the inmates were aroused at both places and the thieves obtained no booty of any value.

Wm. Barnes, of Ridgeway, had his feed mill burn March 28th and on April 6th, the Co.'s agent, A. James, received a draft for the amount of loss, only nine days from date of fire. How is that for time? He was insured in the American Fire Insurance Co. of Philadelphia.

Harris & Hiteshu have got homesick already, we are happy to say. They have returned to Tecumseh and will open a brand new stock of goods in the old Bidwell corner on Saturday next. The stock will consist of dry goods, boots and shoes and notions. We welcome them back to our business circles and predict for them a good trade.

S. C. Munson, aged 88 years and claiming to be the oldest mason in the state, died April 9th, at East Saginaw. He was over 30 years ago a member of Detroit lodge, No. 1, F. & A. M., chapter No. 1, and also of Detroit commandery No. 1. His funeral took place Tuesday, under the auspices of St. Bernard commandery, of this city, of which he was a member. His wife died a few weeks ago and he said he would not long survive her.

In his article on "Where to Spend the Summer," in Scribner's for April, Gen. Greely, chief signal officer, makes a prophesy as to the hottest days in the year 1888. The Detroit Journal, taking the matter up, has offered a prize of $500 to the person guessing correctly, before June 1st, what the 3 days will be. Gen. Greely immediately telegraphed his guess to the paper, in accord with his reasons in Scribner's for April.

The Adrian Times has the following: The canned goods trade is heartily protesting against the retention of the present duty on tin plates, and against the adoption of the Randall tariff, which would increase the duty from one cent to two and one-tenth cents per pound, an advance that would add eight to ten cents per doz. to the cost of canned goods, or double a jobber's profit. Parties interested in the matter will circulate a petition in this city asking congress to make tin plates free.

That's the talk. The more the subject is discussed, the more the iniquitous character of the present tariff is made manifest.

Bishop S. S. Harris made his annual visitation at St. Peter's church last Sunday. The church was filled with an interested congregation. The Bishop delivered an eloquent discourse, and at its close administered the rite of confirmation to a class of three candidates. This brief service was supplemented with a short address of admonition and advice. The services were deeply impressive from first to last. As a pulpit orator, Bishop Harris has no superior in the state. He has many admirers in Tecumseh outside of his own communion, who never miss an opportunity of hearing him. He visited St. John's Church at Clinton in the evening.

M. P. Brown wrote a letter to President Cleveland requesting him to name his twin babies, and he has received the following reply—

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, APRIL 4, 1888.

MR. AND MRS. M. P. BROWN.

The President and Mrs. Cleveland have received your recent letter accompanied by a photograph of your children, and while they appreciate the courtesy of your desire that they should select names for your twin girls, they prefer not to assume this responsibility, and suggest that some personal friend of your family would be better suited to perform this delicate duty.

Very truly yours,
D. S. Lamont,
Private Secretary.

Here is a letter that Mr. Brown can treasure as a valued keep-sake. We have known for some time that Millard was an enthusiastic missionary in the Prohibition cause, but we little dreamed he would attempt to convert Grover.

BUSINESS MENS' MEETING.

When O. P. Bills, chairman of the committee to solicit names for a business men's association, called the meeting to order last Tuesday night, the council room was comfortably filled with the solid business men of the village. Every branch of trade was represented and all were interested in the report of the committee. Mr. Bills stated the object of the meeting and read the by-laws and constitution of the Michigan Business Men's Association, with headquarters at Grand Rapids. Its object is the improvement of the village in which it is located, to get factories to locate there, to secure reduced rates on freight and express and to protect the merchants from professional and other dead heads. It collects bad debts if possible, and if not, the debtor is put on the black list and published to auxiliary associations so all may know him.

Remarks were made by several citizens after which, on motion, it was resolved to organize a business mens' association in Tecumseh as an auxiliary to the State association and adopt their by-laws and constitution. The meeting then proceeded by ballot to elect officers with the following result:

President—O. P. Bills.
Vice Pres.—George Heesen.
Secretary—Fred Rosacrans.
Treasurer—David McNair.
Executive Com.—The President and Secretary, Lucius Lilley, Wm. DeMott, Wm. Hayden.

The meeting then adjourned until next Tuesday evening. The business men are fully aroused to the importance of securing manufactories to help the town and with the officers in charge the association has made a good start toward booming Tecumseh and one which will lead to great results.

Already factories are knocking at our doors for admittance. D. T. Hall received a letter from a gentleman in Pittsford, inquiring about the prospect of procuring aid to locate a factory here, not a very large one but one which will grow. A significant feature of the letter was in closing he said that his name was not "Gale." A corset and bustle factory is also talked of, one of the promoters of the scheme being A. H. Jackson, the former proprietor of the bankrupt store.

MACON GRANGE.

Macon Grange, No. 167, met in regular session on Friday, the 6th inst. The day was an eventful one in the history of Macon Grange, the occasion being the initiation of a class of 30 in the 4th degree, thereby making them working members in the subordinate grange.

PROGRAM.

Meeting—10 o'clock, A. M.
Initiatory work—11 o'clock.
Dinner—12 o'clock.
Social—1 o clock
Exemplification of unwritten work, by P. W. Adams, of Tecumseh—3 o'clock.
Suggestions for the good of the order—4 o'clock.

The next regular meeting will be on Friday, the 20th, at 6 o'clock P. M. All applications made out and presented at that time will be received and promptly attended to, as there is a new class already on the way. While we rejoice at the increased number of farmer's organizations, we regret the scattering of their forces. If farmers would all unite in one association they would make an irresistable power. The grange being the oldest, longest tried and strongest, would seem to be the best for other organizations to merge into. The prejudice against the grange is fast wearing away. Organization and education are fast clearing away the mists of inexperience and farmers are beginning to see the necessity of united action.

M. J. MARTIN.

SEED OATS. SEED OATS.

New variety—Great yield—See what Jno. F. Schreeder, who raised them last year, says, and then come in and buy them:

MARCH 29th, 1888.

MR. C. A. SLAYTON—DR. SIR—In regard to the Early Sweedish Oats I got of you last spring for seed, have to say I sowed them, giving them an equal chance with other oats, say with the Welcome oats, and found them to yield over thirty bushels per acre more than the Welcome oats. Yielding fifty per cent more bushels per acre than other common white oats. They are a good stiff straw and not liable to lodge as other oats.

I shall sow all my oat ground this spring with these oats and shall have a few bushels left to dispose of to other farmers. First call first served.

Yours truly,
JNO F. SCHREDER.

Petty burglars have been fooling around in Tecumseh, Clinton and vicinity for nearly a week past, and it is thought the bullets which will kill them have been cast if they stay around that neighborhood and don't go out of business. The people have armed themselves.—Evening News.

—I have a number of my best and highest priced Pianos and Organs left which I will sell for much less than cost. Call and see them.

REV. CHAS. A. FULTON.

We clip the following item from the Chenango Telegraph, which we think will be of interest to many of our readers. Tecumseh boys are making their mark wherever they go.

From the Norristown (Pa.) Daily Herald of April 5th, we clip the following:

"The First Baptist congregation met in the lecture room of the church last evening for the purpose of balloting for a pastor. Rev. Charles A. Fulton, of Camden, South Carolina, was the only candidate proposed, and his election was practically unanimous. I. N. Harrar presided at the meeting, and Theodore Knabb acted as clerk. The attendance was exceptionally large, the number of members present being fully twenty-five more than at the previous meeting.

"The tellers were John Fry, Dr. Horace Still, Thomas James and Chas. W. Wainwright. The ballot was secret, each member voting on a slip of paper "for" or "against" the candidate; and when the votes were counted it was found out of the whole 195 cast, only 2 were in the negative. This is about as near a unanimous vote as could be expected by the most sanguine, and Chairman Harrar warmly congratulated the congregation upon the like-mindedness which prevailed. He said that not for the last forty years had there been such perfect unanimity in a pastoral election.

"Rev Charles A Fulton, the pastor-elect is a young man who so favorably impressed the congregation upon the occasion of his visit several weeks ago that there was scarcely a doubt that he was the coming man. The congregation has been without a pastor for nearly a year, and has balloted to no result on several names presented heretofore; and the final unanimity of feeling shows that all recognized the kind of pastor the church needed, and was willing to vote for him when at last he came.

"Rev. Mr. Fulton is not a Southerner. His home is really at Norwich, New York, where his parents still live. He graduated from Madison University, and received a flattering call to a church in Scranton, Pa., which he was compelled to decline, his wife's health at the time necessitating a stay in the South. He then accepted the call to Camden, South Carolina, and has been there two years. His wife has entirely recovered her health, and both desire to live again in the North."

Mr. Fulton is the son of Dr. S. J. Fulton of this village.

The Weekly Evening Post.

The New York Evening Post will begin, on the Third day of May, to issue a WEEKLY EDITION, having for its principal aim the promotion of Revenue Reform, which has become the paramount issue of national politics. The existence of an actual surplus in the Treasury estimated to reach $140,000,000 on the 30th of June, 1888, and the further increase thereof under present laws, are a menace to all business interests, and a direct incentive to wastefulness and corruption in the appropriations of public money. The attention of the people having been strongly drawn to this subject by the President in his last annual message, the need of information and popular enlightenment on questions of revenue and taxation has been increasingly felt in all parts of the country.

It is the intention of the management to make a first-class weekly newspaper of 12 pages. Subscription price $1 per year. A free copy of the first number will be mailed anywhere on request. Send address on a postal card to THE EVENING POST, New York.

"THERE IS A TIME TO MOURN."

If Lenten skies alone were dull and gray,
If only hills were bare and meadows cold,
If on the icy shore alone all day
The sobbing waves in plaintive breakers rolled;

If only wailing March winds moaned and sighed,
If but the drifting clouds wept bitter tears,
If but the hills and wilds and billows cried,
And mourned for wasted days of blighted years,

Why, I could laugh then, for my heart would sing
Of Summer days gone by, and yet to be;
For Easter lilies would be blossoming
Beneath the sombre pall of Lent, for me.

I would not care for dull and weeping clouds—
In the light heart there shines unfading light;
But when the light itself in sorrow shrouds,
How dark and pitiless is that sorrow's night.

Here is my sorrow, that in reckless hours
I crushed the buds last Easter time that smiled;
And walked with wayward steps in tangled maze,
And with my sins the fair new life defiled.

So, penitent, again my beds I tell,
Bring me the sackcloth robe that fits so well,
Hand me the sackcloth robe that fits so well,
And load me for the dust to pour over them.

Here let me sit and sigh the hours away,
Taking a weary sinner's place of fear;
Heaven the most, here will I lie and pray,
Counting my beads w[illegible] the world goes by.

Here in the dust and penitence of Lent,
[illegible]
And when [illegible] spirit,
Still in the dust I'll [illegible] and pray.

ROBERT [illegible] BURTIS.

THE UNFINISHED LESSON.

One morning in early spring I was busily practicing in my music room, in the center of a certain bustling, growing, far western town. Presently I became aware that the street door, which I generally locked when I became engaged, but had neglected this morning, was pushed partway open, and an ugly, brown-faced little girl of some 10 years was peering cautiously in, listening. Several times before I had noticed her about the door, but had always been too busy to pay any further attention to her; but this morning I had lessons to, was most too wearied myself to enjoy my practice—so I called out to her:

"Come in, little girl." Without the least hesitation, even eagerly, she obeyed, looking up into my face with a bright smile, which made the little brown mug positively pretty.

"Do you like to hear me play?" I asked graciously—oh! the conceit of it.

"Ye-es, I lofes mu-sik," was her slightly hesitating reply. "I then played for her some gay, rattling gallop.

"Father Saintmeyer not plays like that," was my unexpected applause.

"Ah, indeed! and who is Father Saintmeyer?" I asked.

"You not know him? You not go to mass?" looking at me questioningly. I shook my head. "He vas once our priest—he dead now—peace to his siniess soul!" rapidly making the cross.

"Well, how did Father Saintmeyer play?" I asked.

"I show you!" motioning for me to vacate the stool, which I did, amused and surprised.

She pulled the stool nearer the piano, with some difficulty climbed up on it, was some few moments finding the right keys with which to begin, then—I never heard any music like it!

These childish, dirty fingers wandered deftly over the keyboard, bringing forth now sweet, sad strains, then rippling, silvery runs—then bright, clashing chords, to melt again into the plaintive murmur which seemed the principal thought. Her small black eyes would flash and gleam, and then seem to be almost diffused in tears, while the slender, ragged little form swayed to and fro, until at length she ceased abruptly.

"Oh, I lofes to play musiks! I wish I haf pianner and plays likes odder childer," she cried in a plaintive voice.

For a moment I could not speak. I had heard many brilliant performances by far surpassing this child's simple sonata, and I had been carried away into yearnings such as only musical sounds awaken, but never before had my soul been touched, had I fully realized that communion, fellowship between two beings which is seldom experienced in this material world, and is utterly beyond description.

"Child!" I exclaimed, wrought into being almost tragic. "Who are you?"

"I am Francine Kreigler," she replied, eyeing me curiously and somewhat fearfully. "I lifes down street where those big trees are." I followed her pointing finger and recollected that those big trees were front of the lowest, worst beer saloon in the town.

"Does your father keep that—place?" I asked.

"Yes," she answered in unconscious serenity. "I sometimes plays in dere on the feedle and sometime on the moutsharp. But I not like it, and sometime he beat me so I goes in and plays for dem." There was a sight pause after this confession of musical proficiency.

"And you never take lessons?" I next asked.

"Yes. Father Saintmeyer teach me before mine mother I tink, until he gets shot" and her standing at the cross. "He say I make fine players some days."

"So you will my little girl, so you will, indeed!" I heartily agreed. "Will you take lessons of me?"

"Will yet give me lessons? Oh! I come every day!" was the eager answer. So I appointed an hour for her to come the next day.

I have always believed my little musical education to be great that time. Already I had made up for the mechanical necessities of musical expression and sometimes had caught a glimpse of the delicate double life hidden in the combination of sounds, but the sudden opening of another world of emotion came only to the time musician who not revealed, to me until I gained his entrance to society to the purpose of expressing the soul and spirit which struggled within her.

So not unless the lesson hour would stretch from one to two, and then Francine would suddenly stop with a laughed, and run away saying:

"Oph, he feel me! He know I am here!" That was all the information I had that her terrible parent did not know of her music lessons. I learned that she "kept house" for him, the time with exactness, and that she cooked and performed rough and heavy work with almost the skill of a grown person. She had a good mother, a delicate, refined woman of a much higher caste than her husband. No one knew of their life previous to their coming to N—. How they came to be wedded was almost a mystery; but the woman who cared for the dying woman, and then prepared her for a decent burial, said she had died of a broken heart—had faded and grieved away into a premature grave.

I attempted to interest some of my lady friends in this young life which was growing very near and dear to me. "She was bright and quick in school," they said, "but she did not belong to their people nor to their church, and then her father [illegible]

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, on the 11th day of October, 1886, Samuel W. Temple mortgaged to Addison Hardenburg, all that parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, in the county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point in the east line of Pearl street ten (10) rods north of the north line of Shawnee street, running thence eastwardly parallel with and ten (10) rods distant from said North line of Shawnee street about ten (10) rods to the Railway Depot Grounds; thence northward on west line of said Depot Grounds about six (6) rods to lands of Heesen Brothers and Nyland; said land of Heesen Brothers and Nyland two (2) rods more or less to land conveyed by said Samuel W. Temple and wife, Belle A. to Edwin Woodthen south on east line of said land so as aforesaid conveyed to said Wood two and one-half (2½) rods to the southeast corner thereof; thence west on south line of said parcel of land so as aforesaid conveyed to said Wood eight (8) rods to the east line of Pearl street; thence south on east line of said Pearl street to place of beginning, with all the appurtenances thereto belonging or in anywise appertaining or thereupon situated, including the machinery in and about the buildings thereon or to be hereafter annexed to the same or any part thereof, to secure the payment of $2848.00 in five years from the date thereof with interest to be paid annually at the rate of ten per cent. per annum for the first three years, and for the remaining two years interest to be paid annually at the rate of nine per cent. per annum, which mortgage was on the 11th day of October, 1883, duly recorded in office of Register of Deeds for said county of Lenawee in Liber 93 of mortgages on page 339 and 340. And whereas said mortgage contains a provision that in event any default shall be made in the payment of said interest, or any part thereof at the time therein specified, and shall remain in arrears for the space of sixty days the aforesaid principal sum with all arrearages of interest thereon, shall at the option of said mortgagee, his executors, administrators and assigns, become due and payable. And whereas default has been made in the payment of interest on said mortgage to the amount of $516.66-100 and upwards and the same having remained unpaid and in arrears for a space of more than sixty days, and the undersigned, administratrix, hereby elects to declare and does hereby declare the whole amount due, both principal and interest, amounting at the date of this notice to the sum of $3180.82 100, and no proceedings having been commenced at law or in equity for the recovery of said sum or any part thereof. And whereas the undersigned administratrix has been compelled to pay the further sum of $98.37-100 for insurance premiums to protect her interest as such administratrix in the mortgaged premises.

Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and by virtue of the statutes of the State of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the moneys so due and owing on said mortgage, and the interest thereon from and after the date of this notice, said insurance premiums and interest thereon, as provided in said mortgage, and the cost and expense of this foreclosure, and the attorney fee provided by law; the said above described lands and premises will be sold at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of the Court House in the city of Adrian in said County of Lenawee (that being the place where the circuit court for said county of Lenawee is holden) on Saturday, the 26th day of May, A.D. 1888, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day.

Dated March 1st, 1888.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage made and executed on the third day of June 1886, by the Ohio & Michigan Coal and Manufacturing Company to Addison Hardenburg, and recorded on the 4th day of June, 1886, in office of Register of Deeds for the county of Lenawee, Michigan, in Liber 117, of mortgages, on page 74, by virtue of which said default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas there is claimed to be due and owing at the date of this notice upon the said mortgage and note accompanying same for principal and interest the sum of $2807.50, and whereas the undersigned administratrix has been compelled to pay the further sum of $16.75, for insurance premiums to protect her interest in the mortgaged premises, and whereas no suit or proceedings at law or in equity have been instituted to recover such indebtedness secured to be paid by said mortgage nor any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the monies so due and owing on said mortgage, and interest from and after the date thereof, said insurance premiums and interest thereon, and the cost and expense of this foreclosure, the attorney fee provided by law, the undersigned will sell at public vendue to the highest bidder on the 19th day of May, A.D., 1888, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the front door of the court house in the city of Adrian in said county of Lenawee, (that being the place where the circuit court for said county of Lenawee, is holden) the lands and premises described in said mortgage, viz: All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, in the County of Lenawee, and state of Michigan, and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point or intersection of the north line of Shawnee street with the west line of the Jackson Branch of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad company in said village, thence north at right angles with said Shawnee street, thirty-seven (37) feet; thence northerly on westerly line of said Railroad lands to the northeast corner of a parcel of land formerly owned by Alpheus Stearns, and more recently owned by S. W. Temple; thence west on south line of Railroad depot grounds twelve rods to land formerly owned by Emma Temple; thence south on east line of said land formerly owned by said Emma Temple, as aforesaid about ten rods to the north line of Shawnee street aforesaid; thence east on north line of Shawnee street aforesaid thirteen rods and fourteen and one-half feet to place of beginning.

Dated February 23, 1888.

Wise on said lot now owned by Frank Dean, together with all of the machinery belonging and in possession on said premises. Said mortgage was on the 5th day of May, A.D. 1887, duly assigned by Lewis Smith and George Ferguson to William K. Christy, and said assignment was recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Lenawee county aforesaid, on the 7th day of February, A.D., 18[illegible], in Liber 118 of Mortgages on page 22. Default has been made in the condition of said mortgage whereby the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of three hundred sixty-three and dollars (363.[illegible]) and no suit or proceeding at law or in equity has been instituted to recover the said or any part thereof. Notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgaged premises will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder on the 11th day of May, A.D., 1888, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, at the east front door of court house of said county in the city of Adrian, in said county, said court house being the place of holding the circuit court of said county of Lenawee, to satisfy said amount then due together with all legal costs and charges of this foreclosure.

Dated Feb. 11, A.D. 1888.

The President as a Theater-Goer.

Though fond of the theater, the President rarely attends. His taste doesn't run to the high class opera or the deep tragedy. To him there is sweet music in the paint pant of the fan and in the rattle of the horses and the bright smiles between the Mr. Johnsons and the end men he thoroughly enjoys. But as it will never do for the President to go to a minstrel show, and as he doesn't care for anything else, he simply smokes his cigar, reads the evening papers, and is glad to go to bed at 10 o'clock.

A Papoose for a Pillow.

A few days since, says a Dakota paper, the attention of one of our citizens was attracted to an object in the snow, which proved to be a drunken squaw. She had her papoose under her head for a pillow and the little thing was nearly frozen.

to any other. The foremost of modern blood-purifiers, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is still the most popular, being in greater demand than all others combined.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is selling faster than ever before. I never hesitate to recommend it."—George W. Whitman, Druggist, Albany, Ind.

"I am safe in saying that my sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla far exceed those of any other, and it gives the most satisfaction."—L. H. Bush, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's Pills are the best selling medicines in my store. I can recommend them conscientiously."—C. Bickhaus, Pharmacist, Roseland, Ill.

"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla here for over thirty years and always recommend it when asked to name the best blood-purifier."—W. T. McLean, Druggist, Augusta, Ohio.

"I have sold your medicines for the last seventeen years, and always keep them in stock, as they are staples. 'There is nothing so good for the vernal blood' as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—R. L. Parker, Fox Lake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it, or, as the Doctors say, 'I prescribe it over the counter.' It never fails to meet the cases for which I recommend it, even where the doctors' prescriptions have been of no avail."—C. F. Calhoun, Monmouth, Kansas.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON FOR APRIL 15th. 1888.

CHRISTIAN WATCHFULNESS.—MATT. xxiv, 42-51.

NOTES.—"Watch therefore."—A moral inference from [illegible] spiritual watchfulness that is insisted upon of which physical wakefulness and readiness is the type. One of the first meanings of the Greek term for watch is to live. It is this live spirit ready for the second advent which is here contrasted to that comatose spiritual security that so many foolish ones have.——"On what day."—This expression undoubtedly carried the idea with it of an advent within the lifetime of the disciples. So it was understood by them. But did not the Saviour take a broader view? It is of no real moment whether we meet the Lord in the body or out of it. When we die is uncertain, and it is equally uncertain when that mysterious veil shall be withdrawn that separates the soul from its Saviour. At any rate spiritual watchfulness is absolutely needed.——'The master of the house.' This parabolic case which is pictured before the listeners' mind is represented as having had his house rifled, digged through, because he did not know when to be on his guard.——"Therefore."—So that your case may not be like to this householder, who lost his goods through carelessness. Spiritual readiness is a necessity, for the second advent will be a surprise anyway. Better to be surprised watching than sleeping!——'Who then?"—The answer to this question, which is put in the form of an allegory, is found in verse 46. Instead of a direct answer especial stress is laid on the blessedness of the servant, while the characteristic feature of a faithful servant, the doing, is emphasized by being put last.——"But if."—The contrary alternative is now pointed out with great force in the following parabolic scene. The idea is simply this: suppose that servant who is left in charge shall be wicked instead of faithful, if he shall say in his heart, etc.——"To beat."—Abuse want only his fellow-slaves.——"Eat and drink."—A further unfaithfulness to himself apart from his regular duties as a house servant.——"Cut him asunder."—Many suppose a reference is made here to that awful cruel method of punishment among the Hebrews and other nations when the offender was sawn in two. But the context which implies that the one cut asunder still survives, makes the word more fitly translated cut up by scourging. See margin Rev. Ver.——"His portion with the hypocrites."—Where he belonged. The parable now becomes terrible reality. He had hoped to deceive his Lord when he came; now suddenly unmasked, his is the doleful doom, the heritage of Hell.

INSTRUCTION.—Here is a lesson on rewards and punishments. It is adopted to many who can only be touched by such means. The Pharisees needed either to be argued or frightened out of their stubborn wickedness. Now there is a higher plane that Christian activity is founded on we believe. Where one is neither actuated by the hope of reward nor fear of punishment to good works and holy living; but where the sense of right dominates; where the love of God and the thought of pleasing him overwhelms the panting heart. We need not be troubled with hopes or fears or be distressed by conflicting theories of Heaven if we only try to do his will faithfully and [illegible].

THE GAY VENETIAN GONDOLIER.

Delights of a Night Ride with Two Drunken Boatmen.

At Venice I had my first experience in a gondola. After arriving late at night, it was certainly a new sensation to walk from the station down wide slippery steps to embark [illegible] cabin of which looked [illegible] like a coffin. The gondolas are covered with black and the cabin [illegible] is studded with old fashioned copper nails. Anything more uncomfortable than these covered compartments it would be hard to find. Perhaps upon a pleasant evening one could recline upon a pile of rugs and by lying perfectly flat get his head low enough to be able to get a view out of the window. But in the prosaic rainy or every day life your head is in the top of the coffin fully a foot above the top line of the window. It is so cramped that a person cannot sit upright. I shall never forget my departure from Venice the following night. During the day I had taken a short ride in one of the open gondolas, and found that a fairly comfortable way of going about. But when night come again it rained in perfect torrents. The hour of starting was late. The two boatmen in charge of the gondola chartered to take me to the station had been drinking and were much excited by it. They were in dripping oil skins. I climbed into my coffin compartment with a young English friend and our luggage being placed in front of us, filled the box up completely. Then the gay gondoliers started off with us and made short cuts down through the darkest of side canals where there was not a single light. I could see nothing except the narrow line of dim light gleaming from the black waters through the narrow window. The gondoliers sang and chanted uproarous songs and cries whenever they reached a corner or a bend in the canal, so as to warn approaching boats against collision. The two gondoliers tried to outrow each other, by way of variety, and succeeded by their muscular and furious struggles in making the boat wabble to the right and left in a way that threatened every moment to upset our funereal craft. Every time the boat would lurch in the wildest possible way the boatmen would roar with laughter, as if they had an idea that the occupants of the coffin were thereby paralyzed with terror. They evidently labored to produce that disagreeable impression upon the people whom they were called upon to carry through such a storm at such a late hour at night. But no remonstrance came from the coffin. Neither the representative of England nor of the United States felt like showing any nervousness. Our silence and composure were construed in a complimentary way, for when we filed out at the station after our ride the boatmen saluted us and said "Americanos" as we passed. The peculiar feature of the gondoliers is the way they demand their pourboires. They never wait until they get to the end of their journey. When they are near port they cease rowing, lay down their oars, and demand their drink money with the ferocious air of brigands, leaving it to be inferred that if it is not promptly forthcoming the passengers will never reach the shore.

FOUR BABES AT A BIRTH.

Benjamin Tubbs Beside Himself with Grief and Horror.

Mrs. Charlotte Tubbs, of Caroline county, Md., has driven her husband nearly crazy by giving birth to a quartet of blue-eyed, red-faced, bald-head babies, each weighing from three to five pounds. Mr. Benjamin Tubbs would no doubt have been delighted at this family presentation but from the fact that just sixteen months ago his wife made him a Christmas present of her second pair of twins. One year previous to that she gave birth to a son, and ten months previous was the mother of twins. All the twins and the quartet are girls, and the only boy was the single birth.

Nine children in five years.

This is the maternal record of Mrs. Tubbs, of Caroline county.

Nothing was thought of the rapid increase in the Tubbs family until the last quadruple addition, and now Tubbs is almost beside himself. He could scarcely support the five, and does not know what to do with the nine. A subscription has been taken up to get him and his family better accommodations. It is remarkable that the four babes lived, and from the sound of their lung power and other healthy indications they will all live to keep the two pairs of twins company. Physicians from all the country round have been to see the phenomena. The mother is doing well. The babies were born a week ago, and the fourth was born just five hours after the first.

A Maker of Gods.

A queer story is told of a man named John Colcord, who left Sanford, Me., many years ago and was stranded on one of the Sandwich Islands. Not knowing what to do for a living there, he set up in business as a maker of gods for the ignorant natives, making his images from iron which he picked up from the debris of vessels wrecked on the coast. These images being indestructible gained the favor of the islanders, and Colcord after a prosperous career died, leaving a large fortune. One day in the suburbs of Hong Kong Colcord met a man who had [illegible] up from the wreck of a vessel [illegible] before, who hailed to hail from [illegible] and on investigation Colcord discovered that the stranger's former home was Sandford, and that his name was Coombs, and that he was his Colcord's [illegible] partner. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

How the Declining Years of a Great Woman Are Spent.

Mrs. Stowe's daily life is much the same as that of any other old lady of her quiet tastes. She is extremely fond of taking long walks, when the weather is suitable, and [illegible] around her grounds. Sometimes she may be seen walking alone and lost in thought in a secluded spot on one of the old residents of Hartford. A rather funny incident happened as she was strolling in the fields one day last summer during the hours. On one of the grassy fields lying in the vicinity of Hartford a [illegible] who has lived for over sixty years a mark by the name of Dix. Mr. Dix is now approaching his 80th year, but is a hearty, well preserved old gentleman, and is extremely proud of the fact that he is the father of several generations of children and grandchildren. Old Mr. Dix was picking "yarbs," as he calls them, one afternoon in a field near his home. I will let him tell the rest in his own words:

"I was picking some yarbs in the field when all of a sudden I heard some one say, 'Old man, what are you picking them yarbs for?' I looked up, and jist over the stun wall I see the funniest looking little woman I ever laid eyes on. Kinder simple looking, too. I told her I was getting the yarbs for rheumatiz. Then she asked me my name. I told her my name, and said I had lived in the little house on the hill for nigh on to sixty years. Then I said:

"'What may your name be, marm?'

"'O,' she said, 'my name is Harriet Beecher Stowe.'

"Wall, you could have knocked me down with a feather. I was never more dumfounded in my life. There I'd been taking that woman for er fool."

Is Consumption Incurable?

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says: "Was down with Abscess of Lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an Incurable Consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jesse Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung troubles. Was given up by doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free.

The Most Expensive Bonnet.

Mrs. John Hay is said to wear the most expensive bonnet found at any of the New York theaters, but this charge should not be entirely laid to the milliner, because the most costly part of it is the pin she uses to thrust in her hair at the back to hold the bonnet in place. It is not conspicuous looking, and yet it cost a lot of money, being made of the most exquisite tortoise shell crusted with diamonds. The gems are small and the cost of the workmanship was greater than that of the diamonds. The head of the pin is cut in scrollwork as delicate as lace, and in all these fine convolutions of shell are set thousands of tiny diamonds. The result is charming, but the labor and care expended to produce it were immense.

A Modest, Sensitive Woman

often shrinks from consulting a physician about functional degrangement and prefers to suffer in silence. This may be a mistaken feeling, but it is one which is largely prevalent. To all such women we would say that one of the most skillful physicians of the day, who has had a vast experience in curing diseases peculiar to women, has prepared a remedy which is of inestimable aid to them. We refer to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This is the only remedy for woman's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfactoin in every case or money refunded. See guarantee printed on bottle wrapper.

A Distinguished Clergyman's Testimony.

UP IN A BALLOON.

Railroad Stupidity. Long John Wentworth. Construction of the Pegasus, Kansas City.

BALLOON "Pegasus," April 1st, '88. Here we are back at El Paso, but so disgusted with railroads that we have had constructed a balloon and named it Pegasus, after the Mythological Flying horse. Before bidding good-bye to Mexico, I desire to say a few words in general. It is by far the most interesting country I have ever visited either side of the Atlantic. Its undeveloped resources are something startling, mines whose surfaces have been merely skimmed over, and broad and fertile plains that have only been tickled with a crotched stick. For years Mexico has been a great silver-producing country, and had transportation been afforded, it would have undoubtedly left the world. The Mexican Central R. R. has laid open as with one immense gash, the very heart of that country. And should a sufficient amount of Yankee industry be introduced, its growth and development will astonish the world.

I hear it frequently said that should any private individual conduct his business in the manner the U. S. or any of the States or most of the Railroad Companies do theirs, he would go to the wall in six months. We came from Chicago to Kansas City over the Chicago & Alton R. R., on what they call the "Limited Express," in 24 hours. I saw nothing limited about the train except its speed, which was much less than that of several trains running between New York and Chicago. The term "limited" would be more pertinent applied to the intelligent discrimination, sagacity and even common sense, of some of its Chicago managers. The board of directors better haul down their colors until they can reduce the time to twelve hours, and put some one at the head possessing the above qualities.

While our balloon is being made ready to start, permit me to refer to a distinguished character in Chicago, twice Mayor of that City and four times its Representative in Congress, known as John Wentworth, is an exceedingly eccentric individual, and many side splitting stories have been told of him. In olden times, they say, he would carry away more whiskey—on his shoulders of course—than any other man in Cook County. He is now living on an elegant stock farm near the city, and spends his time mainly in visiting with, and patting his thoroughbred cattle. He has been for years very bald down to the top of his ears, but had, or has a great habit of scratching the little hair left. On one occasion while riding into the city from his farm, scratching as usual, an old farmer sitting in the next seat back reached over, touched Mr. Wentworth on the shoulder and said, "Say, Mister, you will catch them critters quicker if you drive 'em up into the clearin."

Before starting in the Pegasus I will give you a little account of its construction, for when once on our way my whole time will be given to delineating the panorama which will constantly be spread out beneath us. A few months since a friend of mine invented and patented a propelling fan attachment for a balloon, which can be run by hand power or electricity. The fan can be adjusted up or down, right or left, so that the balloon can be made to ascend or descend, back port or starboard, hence no sand bags have to be used. By the addition of a short bow-sprit to which can be attached a small gyb, the balloon can be run in any direction, the same as a yacht, except into the very teeth of the wind. When the breezes are favorable a small spinaker can be thrown out on either side, by the aid of which, together with the revolving propeller fan, immense speed, far exceeding that of the "Limited" can be made. Underneath the balloon will be suspended a canvass life-boat in which by the aid of a small kerosene stove, we expect to have prepared the most delicious meals, for our colored man, Ebenezer "Eb" for short, is a most excellent cook, as well as an unequated turner of the crank. Accommodations being limited, our party will consist of only three, Mrs. O., myself, and "Eb." A balloon being not as commodious as a yacht, we have found it necessary to get a man possessing as many qualities as possible; cooking must be done, and the crank must be turned, otherwise we might drop behind the record of the speedy train mentioned. Excuse me, Kansas City, I have forgotten to say anything about you and certainly you are a worthy sister. As our balloon is not quite ready to start, I will say that Kansas City is a very charming spot, the Good Lord having seen fit to give its surface beautiful undulating. In 1855 the site of the present city was occupied by a fringe of two-story houses along the Southern side of the Missouri river, and on the opposite side a fringe of [illegible] In the short space, little over [illegible] has grown to a population of [illegible]. The city being mostly on the level, the drainage is excellent, the air for those living on the hills very pure. The only drawback is the Missouri river water, which after being filtered is still very dark and impure. Many of the buildings in Kansas City are as large and imposing as those in the cities of the East that are one hundred years old. I would mention here the Midland Hotel, Board of Trade building, National Agricultural Exposition building and The Warden Grand Opera House. Independence Avenue is the principal drive, and any pleasant afternoon you would think you were in Central Park, or on the boulevard between Prospect and Coney Island. The Warden Grand Opera House, not yet completed, is promised to be equal in size and beauty to any play house in Chicago or other cities and, judging from the success that has followed other efforts here, I am inclined to believe that this pledge will be fully kept.

The Coates House is fairly good. The new dining room is very handsome and the decorations are in good taste, except those left upon the table storeroom lamps. The rolls of the boys are generally out of repair, so would suggest mending the former or leaving the latter.

Serving coffee with cream, milk, in undecorated cups with the handle broken off, does not indicate an overwhelming degree of hotel [illegible].

The Coates opera house I state, was first class until the manager informed your correspondent that he did not pass any member of the press living outside of Kansas City, hence the conclusion that he is ashamed to have any newspaper man outside the city see the interior of the Coates.

While writing of Mexico I neglected to mention some of her needs, prominent among which are agricultural implements. Their tools are of the most ancient kind, they plow still with the crooked stick with something like a cultivator tooth attached, with which they simply scratch the surface. They need wagons beyond all measure, which can be manufactured in the United States and shipped to them for one half what they cost in their own country. They still use the old oaken bucket, rawhide instead of oak, and the water is raised in this manner from wells for large herds of cattle. Their furniture is of the most ancient patterns and very cheap, even in the houses of the wealthy. They have no foundries to cast the iron with which their country abounds and still use charcoal ranges, knowing little or nothing of stoves. Comparatively few families possess even a clock and in my judgment millions of the cheaper class could be sold in Mexcio. The wealth of the mines and the fertile soil is there waiting for American capital and genius to bring forth. If this country wants any more territory it is not Canada or Cuba, but Mexico. Would like to say much more of this interesting country, but Ebenezer has just announced that our balloon is all ready to start, so drop my pen and we jump into the "Pegasus" and are off for California. Will drop next letter from the balloon so it will reach you in due time.

OLIVER ORTON.

PANCAKES IN VARIETY.

On cold winter mornings pan cakes of all kinds hold an important place at the breakfast table. The cherished buckwheat cake, most prominent of all, from Thanksgiving Day until early Spring is seldom absent from the morning meal in the genuine American household. When properly made, this is the most delicious of all the griddle cakes, but it has been against it when made from yeast or risen over night that it was difficult to make light and sweet, and that disagreeable effects frequently followed its eating. It is found that by the use of the Royal Baking Power to raise the batter these objections have been entirely overcome, and that buckwheat cakes are made a most delicious food, light, sweet, tender and perfectly wholesome, that can be eaten by anyone without the slightest digestive inconvenience. Once tested from the following receipt no other will be used. Two cups of buckwheat, one cup of wheat flour, two tablespoons of Royal Baking Powder, one half teaspoonful of salt, all sifted well together. Mix with milk into a thin batter and bake at once on a hot grid dle.

The purest and richest syrup is made by dissolving sugar in the proportion of three pounds of sugar to one pint of water. Many persons prefer the flavor of syrup made of Orleans sugar to that made of the white.

Rice griddle cakes are very delicious. This rice is cooked until perfectly soft, drained dry, mashed with a spoon until the grains are well broken up. For each cupful of rice take two eggs, one pint of milk, one heaping teaspoonful of Royal Baking Powder one half teaspoonful of salt, and flour enough to make a thin batter.

For hominy cakes take two cupfuls of cooked hominy and crush it with a potato masher until it is a stiff mass. Add one level teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoonfuls of Royal Baking Powder, and one cupful of flour, stir together, then add by degrees one quart of milk, and lastly three well beaten eggs. Bake in thin cakes.

Very delicate and delicious cakes are made by allowing two teaspoonfuls of Royal Baking Powder and one half teaspoonful of salt to one quart of milk, and sufficient corn meal, mixing all into a smooth, thin batter; no eggs or butter are used for these. The cakes bake quickly to a rich deep brown, are extremely tender and light.

A very delicious, sweet pancake is made by taking one pint of sweet milk, four eggs, two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter, one teaspoonful of Royal Baking Powder, and flour enough to make a moderately thin batter. Beat the eggs, whites and yolks separately, until well frothed, stir the butter, sugar, and the cupful of flour, into which the baking powder has been mixed, into the yolks, then add the milk. If needed, add more flour. Bake in small cakes, butter each one as it comes from the fire, place four in a pile, with very thin layers of any kind of sweet jelly between, and powdered sugar over the top. They should be baked very thin and four served to each person.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Which is More Fully Explained by one from Rev. J. Roberts, Pastor First M. E. Church, Fremont, Mich.

Rheumatic Syrup Co., Jackson, Mich:

Gentlemen—From the fact that several remarkable cures by Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup came under my observation, among which was those of Rev. J. Berry, of Morley, and Mrs. Harrington, of Altoona, I recommended Rev. J. R. Lort to have his daughter give the remedy a trial. As I expected, it broke up the disease, as the following letter explains.

O. C. PEMBERTON, Druggist.

O. C. Pemberton:

My daughter Maud has used Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and plasters, which you so strongly recommended her to try for inflammatory rheumatism. Her limbs were badly swollen, and the poor girl was in terrible agony. In the midst of the pain, we wound the Plasters about her limbs, and, as a result, the swelling was reduced and she became quiet and rested. The Syrup corrected her indigestion, cleansed the rheumatic poison from her blood, and she is now able to be around the house.

Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters are remedies of great merit.

REV. J. ROBERTS,
Pastor First M. E. Church.

Fremont, Mich., Oct. 26, '87.

DYSPEPSIA or indigestion always yields to the curative properties of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup, containing as it does nature's specific for the stomach.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Miss Franc Ewing visited friends in Adrian this week.

Miss Libbie Priest has been sick for a week or more.

Ed. Semark spent Sunday with his family here.

Chris Schnerle has been quite sick again; another attack of inflammation of the bowels.

Mrs. Cobb and Anna, of Saline, visited friends here Friday and Saturday of last week.

Slade Lazell left Saturday for a visit with his brother Barton at Saginaw City.

Mrs. Carson, she that was Allie Elderkin, who formerly lived here was buried at Caro Thursday of last week.

"Dot, the Miner's Daughter" will be presented at Town Hall, Friday and Saturday evenings of this week, by home talent, for the benefit of the Blue Ribbon Club.

Geo. Seagrave will occupy the house from which Mrs. Keysor is moving.

J. C. McAdam of Cadillac, arrived in town Tuesday morning.

Miss Mary Argyle, who has been working for J. J. White, returned to her home in Canada, Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Mickler of Adrian, visited Mrs. Ed. VanDeMark the last of the week.

Keefer & DeWolfe, proprietors of the Gem Gallery left Monday for Manchester, where they will stop a short time.

Geo. Gibson expects to have his Photograph rooms finished this week and then be ready for business. Geo. will have beautiful rooms. All know he is an artist in his line and will turn out first-class work.

Mrs. Hilinda Doty, who has been sick for the past week is gaining nicely, considering her advanced age.

The funeral of A. D. Mead who died so suddenly Wednesday evening, was held at his late residence, Friday at 2 P. M.; Rev. A. W. Stalker officiating. The children were all present. Many of our citizens were present to pay the last tribute of respect to their old friend and neighbor. Mr. Mead had resided in the community many years and his uprightness of character and exemplary life had endeared himself to many and was greatly respected by all.

Chas. and Lewis Waldron of Tecumseh both paid our village a visit the last of the week.

Mrs. E. M. Gallery of Eaton Rapids, sister of Mrs. D. Keyes, came last Friday to assist in caring for the sick.

Mrs. Mina Muir Parker arrived home from Detroit the latter part of the week. She left her husband convalescent.

Mrs. Marjory Rose returned Saturday night from her visit with friends in Detroit.

Ed. Rose passed Sunday with his mother here.

F. Tagg and wife, P. Jacobs and wife, and old Mr. Jacobs, attended the funeral of a relative in Freedom, Monday.

Joseph Henderson, who has accepted a position at Racine, Wis., will shortly be joined by his family. We regret to lose them from our midst. Though here so short a time they have made many friends. John and two of his daughters will remain here however and continue in the Mill. The girls will board at John Hause's and John at Ed. VanDeMark's.

Mrs. Ed. VanDeMark enjoyed a visit from a brother the latter part of the week.

Miss Sarah Spencer returned Monpay evening, from her visit with friends at South Bend, Ind.

Dr. G. W. Kishpaugh returned home Wednesday noon, looking hale and hearty.

Geo. Rogers and Robt. Redick returned home from Bowling Green, O. Wednesday noon.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Farmers have begun plowing and sowing oats.

The latest egg report is from a resident of South street, who has one that measures 6¼x7¼ inches in circumference. Who next?

Mrs. W. H. Arner is suffering with a felon, at present.

G. W. Clark is quite sick at present writing.

Agent A. J. Sutton is on the gain, and nothing preventing, will be at the office again in a few days.

Richard Cadmus went to Monroe, Monday, on business.

Several will attend the Republican county convention, held at Adrian next Monday.

G. C. Arner, who is one of the cable hands on the gravel train, on the new C. J. & M. railroad from Addison to Ohio, was home over Sunday having put in 11 days time last week.

It has been suggested that city constable Helm had better enforce the laws, namely, "the rules and regulations" that was placed in some of the prominent places of business, and see that the evening entertainments at the hardware are dispensed with, and that the much beloved Bells be put on a pole and erected on the corners, as a public nuisance.

Mr. Donhue of Dundee was in the village on business Tuesday.

Rhoda Arner returned Wednesday of last week from a visit with cousins at Ionia and Augusta.

Lou Merritt of Petersburg, was the guest of her sister, Mrs. J. D. Huston, three days last week.

Belle Barlow returned Monday evening from a three month's stay in Detroit, at the conservatory of music.

The next meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held at the home of Mrs. G. P. Waring, on north street, Tuesday evening, May 2d.

R. M. Boyd, wife and son of Raisin, visited friends in the village last week.

Frank Kelsey, traveling agent for Daniels & Ives, of Detroit, put up with S. P. Smith several nights last week, while taking orders in several of the small places around here. He travels with horse and wagon.

Mrs. L. Saviers and daughter, Alice, of St. Louis, Mich., were in the village Saturday evening. They visited the Library during their stay, and complimented the citizens of the village and community for such a beautiful edifice and grand privilege for reading and study.

The next meeting of the L. C. S. will be held at Mrs. M. A. Barrett's on Friday evening of next week. A short musical and literary program will be prepared for the occasion.

Coryell & Williams, the Hardware dealers of the village located in the Waring block, are doing a good business this spring, they having contracted with Milan parties to slate two houses and an elevator the coming season, besides several other jobs about home. Parties contemplating building the coming season would find it to their interests to consult with them before purchasing shingle for they intend to push the slating business this season.

The R. B. B. A. opened the season last Saturday by a game with the Macon club. The game was called at 2 P. M., Macon going to the bat. The entire game was played without any kicking from the visiting club; they showed themselves gentlemen in every respect. The Ridgeway battery were Huston and Palmer. That of Macon, Baker and Pilbeam. Mr. Baker, did some fine work in the box, he having fanned out 12 men during the game. The score stood 6 to 24 in favor of Ridgeway.

FRANKLIN FACTS.

The schools here, now, to use a western expression, are all "took up." Miss Lillie Brown is back in her old place in the Hurry district; Clifford Crittenden in the Paragon; Jennie Wirts of Adrian, the Center; Mary Cummins the Stone schoolhouse; Sadie Taylor in England district; Minnie Wisner is also teaching.

Mrs. Burt Alverson and two children of Hillsdale, are visiting her many relatives and neighbors in Franklin.

Mrs. Geo. Allen, who seemed at one time to rally somewhat has again relapsed into the same very low condition; her sufferings are intense and may be prolonged some time yet.

Mrs. May Wisner is suffering from what is hoped to be nothing but a severe cold and is threatened with an attack of quinsy sore throat.

Some of our enterprising or foolhardy—which?—farmers planted potatoes and garden "sass" more than a week ago.

Mrs. S. N. Munger who has been sick for six weeks past is slowly convalescing.

It is said that twenty-five converts have been baptised, fruits of the recent revival meetings held by Rev. VanAuken and others, at the congregational church at Tipton.

Martin Wheelan will soon begin work on his new barn, which is in fact an addition to the old one; when complete he expects to have a building 80x35 feet.

The maple sugar season is over, and all agree that it has been the poorest for many years. Some makers complain that the flow of sap was so slow that it would become dark and almost sour before enough would accumulate to boil down. There has been more than 5000 trees—perhaps nearly 6000 tapped within a few miles of Tipton, and probably this number might easily be doubled.

The Franklin Union Literary and Lyceum met at the house of J. S. Allen. A. W. Allen's house was the regularly appointed place but sickness in the family rendered it impossible to entertain the society. The evening was spent very pleasantly in the usual exercises. The intention had been to close for the season at this time, but after some discussion, a motion was put before the house to continue the meeting of the society all summer, meeting the last Saturday evening in every month and the uproarous applause which followed the unanimous adoption of this motion showed how interested were the members in their work. One reason urged for the continuation of the society was that the hard worked farmer needs some relaxation from toil in summer as well as winter, and what is better calculated to soothe the tired nerves than a few hours spent in social converse with our friends, where the disappointments of the past may be discussed, the hopes of the future whispered to sympathetic ears. Something of the toil and drill of the past will be dropped more of the social element introduced. The society will meet at G. W. Allen's, April 28th. A long program has been prepared which will be at least, in part—carried out.

NORTH EAST FRANKLIN.

Mrs. Allen is still very low.

Bridgeman Wells went to Detroit last week.

Mrs. Munger has been very sick but is now able to sit up some.

Mrs. Lucy Payne was attacked with quinsy again a few days ago, but prompt treatment soon put the enemy to rout.

L. E. Taylor has planted his first installment of potatoes—six bushel—in the ground.

Hare & Thacher are sawing pickets for Messrs Hunt, VanDoren & Witherell.

Smith & Fox are building picket fence on J. Bunting's land.

The Allen Brothers, from the junction, have been balling hay at Fred Bunting's.

Schools are opening again. Minnie Wisner is teaching in the Brown dist. near Clinton; Minnie Martin holds sway in the Smalley dist.; Mary Cummins began work in dist. No. 3, on Monday; Tina VanValkenburgh is busy at the "Grub," where she has done good service before, and Cliff. Crittenden continues his well appreciated labors at the Paragon. At the Excelsior, school has been running since the first of March with Sadie Taylor as teacher.

ONSTED ODDS.

Of course the wild geese have been seen.

Roads are getting in fair shape now.

Farmers are rather busy in preparing the soil for oat sowing.

Mr. James Reed of Brooklyn, was in town twice during last week.

The fields are putting on a green cast these days.

Wheat is coming on slowly but it looks as though the crop would be rather a light one this year.

A little of the "beautiful" was seen Sunday morning.

Our private telephone asserts a new nine pound girl at Carey Burrows, which reported there a few days ago.

The Sunday School Institute here last Saturday passed off very pleasantly, the program being duly carried out, made it very interesting to all that attended.

We have a curiosity in this vicinity in the shape of a man who says that he has not been to meeting in fifty years.

Mrs. Wm. Aldrich killed the first snake of the season that we have heard of yet, and the lady is 79 years of age and did the job with her cane.

The Rome correspondent of the Adrian Times is almost tickled to death on the advent of that little maiden at their house which makes things jingle they say, but we know how it is, brother.

Butter brought 22cts. per pound and eggs 15cts. per dozen in this market last week.

Glenn & Co., have added a selection of choice paints for spring painting and decorating, to their already large assortment of farm and family goods.

Quite a quantity of peas has already been sown this spring.

Letters received last week from Mexico, Oswego Co., N. Y., reports snow in seemingly inexhaustible heaps in that part of the State.

Uncle Moses Butterfield will erect a new house this season near the site of the old one.

Mr. Short is preparing the cellar and foundation for his new house just south of the school house.

George Onsted has moved into Lemuel Sheeler's tenant house and we have been informed will work for Corwin this season at carpenter work, also Vern Greenleaf.

The frame of George Woodard's house that his father is putting up for him is up and being enclosed. The work is being done by Tecumseh parties.

The increase of work has caused another new blacksmithshop to be put in town, and the firm's name is Daniels & Marshall, as we have been informed.

Supervisor J. E. Gibbs has started out on his grand rounds.

Fred Morton has closed up his maple sugar manufacture for this year.

Peter Russell is sojourning near Chicago at present.

Mrs S. A. Darling, we understand has rented a part of David Aldrich's house for the summer.

Mrs. Cornelius Bancroft of southwest Rome, was in town last Friday.

There are 35 scholars enrolled on the books this term; and the following three pupils have commenced attending school for the first time, Johny Snow, Ella Reynolds and Ollie Aldrich.

PRACTICAL TARIFF TALK.

Here is the p[illegible] way a friend in Plymouth, Ind., puts the tariff question. It is true and convincing: "My friend Joseph Blair kept a small country store in a pretty village in this state and made occasional visits to the east to purchase goods. I chance[illegible] to meet him on one of these journeys, and we were frequently together for a day or two. On the morning of the third day he appeared at the breakfast table with a scowl on his face. He observed my look of surprise and said:

"I've got my eyes open on this confounded tariff question and I'm madder'n a wet hen too. I never thought much about the tariff before. When I came up here I had my list made out, and as I sat in the office by the table waiting for be[illegible] time, I picked up a pamphlet and it was an American almanac, by [illegible]ford, librarian of congress. I looked in it, and it was full of everything, I thought. I stumbled onto something about the tariff, and I got interested. I took my list and sat down to that tariff article and calculated how much tariff I had to pay on what I was going to buy, and I have it [illegible] paper. It stirred me up so, I [illegible] got over it, I tell you, if the [illegible] people of this country could [illegible] to see the actual working of the tariff, they would hang every [illegible] man who voted again[illegible] a strict revenue st[illegible] as he reaches home.

"[illegible] sure enough. His hand came [illegible] his leg hard enough to s[illegible] heard as he made the last asse[illegible] His voice snapped like a saxi[illegible] when some player is getting [illegible] fortissimo.

Several persons gathered around, and for 15 minutes Jo exhibited his list and cursed the tariff and all its supporters with an emphasis born of unmeritable vexation. He pictured the small f[illegible] and laborers in his neighborh[illegible] scraping themselves to raise money to pay the enormous tax going into the pockets of the rich men prot[illegible] by the confounded tariff. As a convenient argument Jo handed in his list of his previous day's pur[illegible]ses tabulated so as to show how much the tariff tax amounted to.

"Here you see," said Jo, "that except the syrup and olive oil not a cent goes to the government. And as that is corn syrup, and the olive oil is made from cotton seed, both frauds, I must charge all this to my customers as it is charged to me, for the benefit of the manufacturers, and not a cent goes into the treasury. Why, great God! look at it! $275.81 worth of goods and my customers pay to these manufacturers $286 of profit on pretence of protecting home industries! I tell you, if the value of the goods, and the tax were plainly marked, there would be rebellion in 60 days."

The next page of Jo's bill had about $500 more of goods, but he had not run out the tariff. As I bade him good morning, he said, "We are ignorant, suffering people, we country Jakes; but if we learn in time, we'll hang some of these knaves who grow fat on our hard earned pennies, and by telling us they are doing it all in the interest of the laboring man to get our votes for office."

I wish we had more voters like my friend Jo.

WHEN JANIE MILKED THE COWS

The daisy held her dainty cup
To catch the dew-drops bright;
The bee had kissed the clover-tops
And bade them all good-night;
The katydid had tuned her song
Among the apple boughs,
And farther stretched the shadows long
When Janie milked the cows.

The swallows nitted here and there,
The lark had left his bower,
The primrose, with a bashful air,
Unclosed her petaled flower;
The whippoorwill, his plaintive tale
Proclaimed 'neath woodsy boughs,
And twilight dropped her dusky veil,
While Janie milked the cows.

And Ben, the plowboy, strolling by
Comes down the open bars,
While softly in the shadowy sky
Shine out the evening stars;
And while the cow-bells whisper low,
Two lovers pledge their vows,
Amid the twilight's purple glow,
While Janie milks the cows.

* * * * * * *

A little cottage, snug and new,
With hope-vines wreathed about,
The sunbeams peeping softly through
Lie dame's [illegible] door,
And when the first pale evening stars
Shine into the forest boughs,
Young Farmer Ben, [illegible] the bars,
Hops down to milk the cows.

BROTHERS.

When, in the turbulent winter of '60-'61, Lieut. Clarence Grey, of Point Providence, Va., heard everywhere in Washington dark mutterings of "secession" and "coercion," he did not, or would not believe in the baleful import of the words.

His landlady's pretty daughter, Bertha, had captivated his young fancy, so that he was thinking far more of the sovereignty of love than the sovereignty of State when Fort Sumpter's cannon roar roused him from his reel.

With the order to rejoin his regiment in his pocket, Clarence had resolved to obey it. There had been but one moment of indecision.

Standing in the little boarding house parlor, on the morning of his departure, a letter was handed him from his only brother. Hubert wrote:

"I shall not be a traitor to my native State. I remain here to defend it from the invader."

There was no word of advice to the younger brother but his widowed mother had added one tremulous line—she could not think that any son of hers would be Virginia's enemy.

And then, man as he was, soldier as he was, his hot tears blurred the written page, whereupon entered Bertha, and he silently handed her the letter.

She read it slowly, then, turning her beautiful eyes upon him, she said:

"At West Point you learned the art of war at the expense of your country. Can you use a knowledge thus gained against her, Clarence?" she cried, pointing to the stars and stripes floating in view of the window, "be true to your oath to protect that flag against all of her enemies."

The young man wondered in the had faltered; taking both her hands in his he mingled with his words of farewell a promise of allegiance to his country's flag.

In the dark days that followed he cherished the hope that the fortunes of war would not lead him back to his native State. Yet one spring day found him not only in Virginia, but almost within sight of Point Providence, and a battle impending.

Gen. Hamilton, his superior officer, sent for him to report at headquarters.

"Lieutenant, said Hamilton, when young Grey appeared, "I learn that you are a Virginian, and very familiar with this locality."

"Sir," replied the young man, and his voice was not quite clear, "I am within five miles of my birthplace."

Then Hamilton unfolded his plan.

Just before daybreak he intended to attack a bridge held by the Confederates. During the night Grey must march his men by some circuitous route best known to himself to the rear of the enemy, and he must then display men across every road by which the Confederates could possibly escape.

As Grey passed out of the tent the scout who had discovered the position of the Confederates at the bridge approached and laid a detaining hand on his arm.

"Young feller," he said, in a low voice, "don't you go to thinkin' that because them rebels at the bridge is raw recruits you got a soft thing. Lord! the leader o' them Home Guards' is a reg'lar stiff-backed blue-blooder. Grit! why the folks 'round here 'low that Herbert Grey kin hold that bridge if Yanks' come along with horns growin' out in their heads; defendin' the site of his forefathers, you know."

That night, above the sounds of the wind and the driving rain, could be heard the tramping of feet and the clinking of canteens as a body of infantry moved out from the Union lines and disappeared in the gathering gloom.

Their young leader, as he rode forward told himself that he was now acting, not as a brother, nor yet as a son, nor even as a Virginian, but only as a soldier, following duty wherever she led.

But on the odor of this familiar forest of Virginia pine, what memories it brings. It is not so dark but the young man's keen eye recognizes the spot, there between that cedar and a dwarf pine, where Herbert used to set for him the snare to catch rabbits.

And now he has reached a little eminence, and he turns his head aside to catch a glimpse of a marble shaft which he knows is in sight. Suddenly a wild superstition thrills him. Can he who sleeps beneath that marble rest in his grave while his son—a Virginian—invades Virginia?

And Hubert, who had taken the father's place to his young brother, he will learn that that brother—that traitor—crept like a thief through the darkness tramping his father's grave—no, not that, not a step further.

"Halt!" The ranks stood silent.

The young man reeled in his saddle as he rode forward alone. He did not say to himself that this was desertion, for his brain seemed whirling, and all he could think of was the one fixed idea of warning Hubert, saving Hubert, and then returning to fight for the old flag as he had sworn to Bertha. Hubert would let him come back; Hubert never opposed him in anything.

Many hours later a carrier with a dispatch from Hamilton to Lieut. Grey found the men patiently waiting in soldierly obedience where they had been ordered to remain. The dispatch read.

"A scout has discovered that the Confederates at the bridge have been heavily reinforced by regular troops, who are drawn up in the line of battle. Return to the Union lines. The enemy is evidently about to take the initiative."

And so through the mud and rain the men retraced their steps and now they hear, first a sullen note or two, then louder and more distinctly, the continuous roar of artillery and rattle of musketry.

They began to meet panic-stricken stragglers and then wounded men on stretchers, which were sometimes only blankets, hastily fastened to bayonets.

They were met by a courier who assigned them to their places in the field, that of supporting some batteries on the extreme left flank. They would find Gen. Hamilton commanding in person at this point. And so through a chasm of [illegible] horrors, they marched to their places. They were cheered as they came up by the poor fellows at the guns, some of whom fell with that smile of welcome still on their blackened faces.

Once during the day as Gen. Hamilton rode up and down, he caught a glimpse of Clarence Grey humbly fighting in the ranks.

Instantly the whole truth flashed upon his mind, but controlling his impulse to shout him, he rode on.

The reckoning would come another day! It was near night, when a body of Confederates charged upon Hamilton's position. Raw recruits? Yes. Only some State troops—the Home Guard; but how splendidly they came on, right in the face of the Federal guns.

See the front rank melt away, but solid, in the lines close up and, wildly cheering, they come on steadily.

Now it is a hand to hand conflict, resisted at first with clubbed muskets and bayonets, then the Federal gunners began to leave their pieces, the Union line wavered and broke. Hamilton, unhorsed, is trying to rally his men when the Confederate commander rides down upon him with uplifted saber, but before the blow can fall a young field officer in the blue uniform throws himself upon the body of his General, and, if another instant, Hamilton's life is saved, but Clarence Grey, the gallant hearted youngest of his own house, lies dying on a bloody field struck down by his own brother's hand.

The Home Guard look to their leader, but the sword has fallen from his nerveless fingers and in his face of despair his men read defeat, and begin, in confusion to retreat.

Hamilton bent over the poor bleeding, disfigured face of the dying man.

"Your name, my brave boy," he said.

"I am the traitor, General!—"

The young head fell backward, and unheedingly above it the tide of battle ebbed and flowed. He slept, nor heard the shouts and cheers of contending forces, friend or foeman it mattered not.

The National banner floats triumphantly today in Point Providence. On the walls of a mansion in the village is a portrait in oil of a young West Point cadet.

You would not say, looking at the proud, sensitive lips and at the clear, truthful eyes, that this was the face of a traitor.

The sad-eyed master of the house never enters the room where the picture hangs.

Herbert Grey had once been a gay hearted, hospitable man, but now he is so sad and s[illegible] the children call him the "Silent Man."

Point Providence says it was the war.

A Tremendous Sensation

would have been created one hundred years ago by the sight of one of our modern express trains whizzing along at the rate of sixty miles an hour. Just think how our grandfathers would have stared at such a spectacle! It takes a great deal to astonish people now-a-days, but some of the marvelous cures of consumption, wrought by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, have created wide-spread amazement. Consumption is at last acknowledged curable. The "Golden Medical Discovery" is the only known remedy for it. If taken at the right time—which, bear in mind, is not when the lungs are nearly gone—it will go right to the seat of the disease and accomplish its work as nothing else in the world can.

Twenty-three years ago last Monday, April 9th, Lee surrendered to Gen. Grant at Appomattox.

Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic is not a stimulant but a nerve food, restoring nerve force lost by sickness or excessive mental work or the use of liquor, opium, morphine or tobacco. It supplies food for nerve tissues and by its gentle aperative action, removes all restraint from the secretive organs, hence curing all diseases of stomach and liver. Dr. Geo. Ferguson will supply the genuine Red Clover Tonic at 50 cents a bottle.

A Dressmaker's Experience.

DEAR SIR:—As Mr. Hinman, the druggist, told you I am a great friend of your remedy. I have used it at intervals during the past 12 years. It carried me safely through the critical period of change of life without a single sick day and it did great things for me in many ways.

I always recommended it where I see a case that needs it. It always does splendidly, often accomplishing more than you have ever claimed for it, and more than any one would readily believe who did not personally know the cases.

I now consider myself well, but I work hard at my business—dressmaking—and when I am tired and nervous a small dose of ZoaPhora quiets and rests me. I always have it in my house. Yours truly,

A Narrow Escape.

Mrs L. S. Pickerell, of Middlebury, Ind., had a very narrow escape from the insane asylum. For years she was subject to headache, palpitation, spinal pain, sleeplessness and nervous prostration. For three years she had convulsions, often as many as fifty a night. Able physicians failed to help her. At last after taking that wonderful remedy, Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for six weeks she was entirely cured. It is a recent discovery by one of the greatest of living physicians, and is working wonders. Trial bottle free at Baker and Hall's, Drug Store.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhœa, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

BOOKS, THREE CENTS EACH!

The following books are published in neat pamphlet form, printed from good readable type on good paper, and many of them handsomely illustrated. They are without exception the cheapest books ever published in any land or language, and furnish to the masses of the people an opportunity to secure the best literature of the day at the most trifling expense. In any other series these great works would cost many times the price at which they are here offered. Each one is complete in itself:

Wonders of the World, NATURAL AND OTHER. Contains descriptions and illustrations of the most wonderful works of nature and of man. Very interesting and instructive.

Wonders of the Sea. A description of the many wonderful and beautiful things found at the bottom of the ocean, with profuse illustrations.

"A Pleasure Excursion," and Other Sketches. By "JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE." A collection of irresistibly funny sketches by the most popular humorous writer of the day.

The Aunt Keziah Papers, by CLARA AUGUSTA, author of "The Rag Doll." A most ridiculously funny book—in every way equal to "Widow Bedott."

Christmas Stories, by CHARLES DICKENS. Contains a number of the most charming Christmas stories ever written by the greatest writer who ever lived. Each one is complete.

Round the Evening Lamp. A book of stories, pictures, puzzles and games, for the little folks at home.

Popular Recitations and Dialogues, humorous, dramatic and pathetic, including all the latest, best and most popular.

The Self-made Men of Modern Times. Contains portraits and biographies of famous self-made Americans, from the time of Franklin to the present.

Familiar Quotations. Containing the origin and authorship of many phrases frequently met in reading and conversation. A valuable work of reference.

Low Life in New York. A series of vivid pen pictures showing the dark side of life in the great city. Illustrated.

The Road to Wealth. Not an advertising circular, but a thoroughly practical work, pointing out a way by which all may make money, easily, rapidly and honestly.

DARING AND SUFFERING.

A History of the Andrews Railroad Raid Into Georgia in 1862.

The Most Heroic and Tragic Episode of the Civil War.

Embracing a Full and Accurate Account of the Secret Journey to the Heart of the Confederacy, the Capture of a Railway Train in a Confederate Camp, the Terrible Chase That Followed, and the Subsequent Fortitude of the Leader and His Party.

The expedition, in the daring of its inception, had the wildness of a romance; while in the gigantic and overwhelming results it sought and was likely to obtain it was absolutely sublime.—JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL HOLT'S OFFICIAL REPORT.

It was all the deepest laid scheme, and on the grandest scale, that ever emanated from the brains of any number of Yankees combined.—THE SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY (ATLANTA, GA.), April 15, 1862.

Despite its tragic termination, it shows what a handful of brave men could undertake in America.—COMTE DE PARIS' HISTORY OF THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA, vol. 2, p. 187.

By WILLIAM PITTENGER,
A MEMBER OF THE EXPEDITION.

We were told to be ready to start north at 4 o'clock the next morning. We could have been ready in four seconds! But we were unutterably glad to have it brought even that near. At times a deadly misgiving arose for a moment that all this might prove a delusion, but the actual signing of the parole was a strong anchor to our hope.

As might be expected, that evening was one of wild excitement. Nearly everybody in our room acted like men bereft of reason. Some danced and bounded over the floor, embracing each other and pledging kind remembrances. Others shouted till they were too hoarse to shout any more. Others sat down and wept. The deliverance was so great that they were completely overpowered. But a few were, for some reason, not permitted to go, and we deeply pitied them.

It was near midnight before we became calm enough to offer up our usual evening devotions. But when the roomful of excited men were still at last, wearied out by the very excess of joy, and overcome by the quietness which ever follows powerful emotion, we knelt in prayer. Many more than the usual number assembled with us in the corner of the room where we always gathered. The prayer was one of overmastering thankfulness. When we remembered all the sufferings through which we had passed it seemed as if we could never cease to be grateful. We asked God for strength to bear every trial; but we also implored with a fervor and sincerity which few can realize, that he would not allow our bright and vivid hopes to be disappointed and us to be dashed back from the paradise of liberty. And we asked with no little solicitude for strength to continue in his service when no longer confined within prison walls, so that the precious possession we had found in the darkness might not pass away in the light; thus composed we lay down to await the event.

The commanding officer, who stepped into the door long before the morning light gave the thrilling order, "Get up and prepare for your journey!"

At his call we hurriedly thronged to our feet. All doubts and fears vanished. It was true! Freedom once more! Our terrible activity was passed. O joy! Joy! Joy inexpressible! almost too wild and delirious for earth!

There was a hurrying around in the partial darkness left by the glimmering of lights; discordant calling of names, a careful inspection of each man to see that none went but those intended; and then we formed in the courtyard for the march toward freedom. We fell into two lines and when all was ready we passed again into the office, were carefully counted, and with bounding hearts passed outward through the dreaded portals of Castle Thunder—the same portal through which we had passed inward more than three months before. There was all the hope of the morning in this coming out!

We halted on the pavement until perfectly formed, and then, with the guard, marched through the muddy, unlighted streets for many squares. There were a number of sick in our company, but not one of them was willing to be left behind; and as the rebels had neglected to provide any conveyances, we helped them—each being supported between two stronger men, and thus with circling arms they were able, at the expense of much suffering in some cases—to accompany us the weary distance. Two or three had to be almost wholly carried, but the burden was cheerfully endured, upborne as we all were on the wings of hope and exultation.

WILLIAM BENSINGER. WILLIAM REDDICK. ROBERT BUFFUM. JACOB PARROTT. E. H. MASON.
GROUP OF THE EXCHANGED PRISONERS.

Seated in comparatively comfortable cars, with no ropes or irons upon us, and but a weak guard, and with deep peace and content in our hearts, we glided out of the rebel capital—to see it no more till all that had belonged to rebel power had passed away "Like the baseless fabric of a vision, and left not a wrack behind." The unwonted light dazzled our eyes. The motion of the cars was an intoxication. This was happiness indeed. The thoughts and visions of the night were lived over again in scarcely less bright waking dreams. I tried to look at the country through which we were passing, but my preoccupation was so great that I could scarcely see it at all.

Petersburg was reached with no notable incident; then after but a short detention we moved on toward City Point. As the train passed around a curve about 11 o'clock we saw a very large steamboat in [illegible] since we left our own Ohio. But there was something still better than the boat. Waving over it in the morning breeze was the "Flag of the free." I seized the comrade next me and shouted, "Hurrah, boys, hurrah! there's our flag!" They needed no prompting, indeed some in the forward cars had seen it sooner than I had. Cheer after cheer went up from the whole train; some of the guards were discontented at our vehemence and said, "Stop that noise, there's no use in making such a fuss;" but we did not stop. This was the first time we had seen that banner for eleven long months, and it meant to us life, home, freedom, country—everything which men love and live and pray for, intermingled till we drew up at the station but a short distance from the truce boat State of Maine.

WILLIAM PITTENGER.

From its side issued a long procession of prisoners, 350 in number, who did not seem to be nearly so much rejoiced as we were. They were formed in line, and there was a calling of names, a checking of lists, with inquiries about special officers, for what seemed to me a long time. Some disputes arose, but I could not catch the words, and could only pray silently that all might be arranged in such manner as to prevent the necessity of our going back to Richmond. I remember somewhat dimly the picture presented immediately at the wharf under the sunshine of that March day! Of more distant objects I have no recollection whatever. In fact, I was dazed almost equally by the brightness of open daylight and by the happy coming of this long expected day. I could not, however, help being struck by the contrast between the sets of prisoners. Those on the Confederate side looked strong and hearty; their clothing was whole, neat and clean; but on our side all the number were in the last extremity of raggedness, dirt and emaciation. I have totally forgotten whether any breakfast was given us that morning or not—a matter of small moment when we had been obliged to starve through so many longer journeys.

While the wrangling over details was still going on, without, as far as we could see, any prospect of termination, the order was suddenly given us to "Go on board." Most promptly it was obeyed. It meant a great deal for us to be actually under the Stars and Stripes once more. But not till the boat cast loose and swung into the stream did we count ourselves truly out of Confederate lands.

Then, too, the hearty welcome with which we were greeted; the good cheer, so different from our miserable prison fare; and the kind faces smiling all around, showed in living colors that we were free men again.

In regard to food, the great difficulty now was one we had not encountered for a year past—that of over eating! A year's famine had made us terribly hungry, and we received cautions on this point which were not unneedful. Nothing in the rations were more enjoyed than the tin cup of good coffee which was given to us all—genuine coffee was something which we had not tasted inside the rebel lines—and I am not certain that I have found any as good since! No place on the boat seemed more homelike than the engine room, where I sat and ate slowly for a long time. The working of the strong machinery which seemed impelling us lovingly homeward was about as much company as I wanted for the time.

Down the river we went in a delirious dream of rapture! We were scarcely conscious of passing events. Probably no emotion on earth has greater sweep and intensity than the wild throbbing sensations that rush thick and fast through the bosom of the liberated captive.

CHAPTER XXVII.

REPORTING TO SECRETARY STANTON AND PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

I have forgotten almost everything that took place on this homeward voyage, if, indeed, my mind was not too nearly in the condition of a walking dream to receive definite impressions. I saw some of the great gunboats as we drew near the mouth of James river, which looked like grim sentinels guarding the avenue to rebellion. We were furnished comfortable blankets, and when tired out, as much by unwonted emotions as by physical effort, we could lie down and slumber at our will.

We arrived in Washington late in the afternoon—I know not of what day, but presume it was the day after leaving Richmond, which would be Thursday, March 19. I made no memoranda at this time, such as I had not failed to keep during the darkest parts of our history. In my own experience joy was more overpowering than sorrow.

After supper we took our proposed walk. But once outside in the dark street, with no place to go, no money to buy anything and nobody to care for us, it began to seem rather lonely. We had been objects of so much solicitude for so long that we could scarcely help feeling a little neglected now that nobody prevented us from wandering in any direction we chose. Beside, we were not yet provided with new clothing. A regular requisition would have to be filled before our wants in that direction could be supplied; and the air was chilly. After wandering aimlessly for a few squares, looking in at the shop windows and staring at the great buildings, we turned and were soon back in the barracks. The room, which was well warmed, seemed very cozy. It was easy to consider the sentinels at the door as placed there to guard us from an enemy, a view of the case which greatly pleased the Tennesseeans. I really think we slept better than we would have done if at a first class hotel.

The next day, as I had expected, all restrictions were removed from the other members of the party; but we were invited to make our home at the barracks, receiving regular soldiers' rations, as long as convenient.

We did not remain long. A wealthy and patriotic lady, Mrs. Bales, had fitted up a pavilion in her yard in excellent style and kept it filled with convalescents from army hospitals, to whom she gave the attendance and most of the comforts of home life. Hearing our story, she applied to the Ohio state agent, Mr. J. C. Wetmore, to secure us as lodgers. He visited us and carried the invitation, which we gratefully accepted. Here we lived in fine style, with all a soldier's comforts, and excellent company. We had now received a suit of army blue and made a bonfire of our Confederate rags; so that we were a little less afraid of lady visitors. Our hostess made an evening reception for us, where there was an [illegible] did not remind us of anything in Dixie—and had the privilege of telling our story to many sympathizing ladies. Having a very comfortable ambulance always at command—the property of our kind friend, and kept with a driver for the use of her soldiers—we were able to visit the places of interest in Washington with great comfort. Of this privilege we freely availed ourselves when business permitted.

On one of these occasions when we were at the Smithsonian institution, I saw a tall man of striking appearance and at once said to my comrades, "That is President Lincoln." But they were incredulous. They had read in southern papers that he never stirred out of the White House without a heavy guard, and at once they said, "You are trying to deceive us; don't you see there is no guard here?" I was a little puzzled by the absence of the guard myself, for I had believed the story, and there were only one or two civilians with him; but I had seen Lincoln, who could not easily be forgotten. I said, "Come up and let us speak to him!" A little reluctantly they advanced, and when we were near enough I said, "Can you tell us the name of this animal?" pointing to the skeleton of the geologic monster he was looking at. He smiled in his kind, sad way and answered, "That's its name written on that card; but I don't undertake to pronounce it. I don't know much about such things." One or two remarks were exchanged on indifferent topics, and then we parted. When at a safe distance Buffum said, "Pittenger, you can't play such a joke on us as to make us believe that a man who will speak to common folks in that off hand way is President Lincoln!" But I only replied, "We'll go and see him at the White House soon and then you can judge."

The first Sunday of our stay in Washington we gladly accepted the invitation of our kind hostess to accompany her to the Baptist church, of which she was a member. This put to a great trial on my part. The preacher seeing five men in soldier uniform in her pew—Mason, who was sick, remained at home—came down and spoke to her. A few words were exchanged, and then he turned to us and said: "Can't you tell us a little about your strange deliverance? I will make the other services very short." The faces of all our party turned toward me, and the minister, taking the hint, repeated his question to me individually. Something like this was just what I had feared when I had the great mental struggle in Atlanta prison. I wished to refuse, but in the freshness of deliverance such a refusal would have seemed little less than a crime. The minister was better or worse than his word, for he did not preach at all, but on finishing the opening services spoke a few words about the great sufferings and lessons of the war, and the hardships and temptations of the army; then added that there were some men present that morning whose experiences were marvelous beyond the common lot of men, and one of them had consented to give some account of them.

I rose at the call and scarcely could have felt worse for a moment if in Swim's prison. But the people were so kind and attentive that embarrassment vanished. I passed very lightly over the military part of the enterprise, and spoke especially of God's goodness in delivering us. When I told of the sudden death of our comrades in Atlanta, and of their regrets for not being better prepared for death, there was weeping over all the church. At the close of the meeting kindly greetings and proffers of service were showered upon us.

We lodged in the tent provided by this lady during the whole of the ten days of our stay in Washington. Many other persons wished to take us as guests, but she refused unless we would say that we wished to leave her care. Mason, being sick, was taken into the house and nursed most carefully.

On our first morning in Washington I had written a note to Secretary Stanton giving notice of our arrival and of my belief that the government, if not already fully informed, ought to know our story. I supposed this would produce more speedy results than to let the matter pass through the ordinary channels, and was not disappointed. He gave written orders to Hon. Joseph Holt, judge advocate general, to investigate the whole matter, provide for all our wants in the meantime, and then bring us to him. Hon. J. C. Wetmore, of the Ohio military agency, attended to procuring us the legal allowance for commutation of rations during the time of imprisonment, so that we were soon in funds. Regular pay with arrearages could not be given till we returned to our regiments.

Our first visit to Judge Holt was a merely friendly one, and the time was spent in familiar conversation. Maj. Gen. Hitchcock, commander of the post at Washington, was also present.

The next day we went again, being taken each time in a government carriage, and found Justice Cullen, of Washington, ready to administer an oath, with a phonographer to take down the testimony as given. I was examined first, telling the whole story, and then each one followed, confirming what was said, and adding omitted particulars. The evidence that we were telling a true story was far stronger than we knew. The story of Wood and Wilson had been on file in the department since the preceding November. It was far less full than ours, but confirmed it in every essential particular. Indeed, the certainty that we were giving a simple, plain and uncolored narrative was so complete that no one save Gen. Buell ever called any part of it in question, and he only because of ignorantly confounding the first and second expeditions.

The testimony thus taken was published in the next issue of The Army and Navy Gazette, as also in the Washington papers of April 4, and copied over the country. The examination before Judge Holt was on the 24th of March, and his report to the secretary of war based upon them was dated the 27th.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

INTERVIEW WITH SECRETARY OF WAR STANTON AND PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

When we reached Washington a day was fixed for an interview with Secretary Stanton. Ohio State Agent Wetmore and Maj. Gen. Hitchcock accompanied us. Gens. Sigel and Stahl, with many other distinguished persons, were in the anteroom waiting, but as we were there by appointment, they continued to wait, while we were at once admitted. Stanton had long resided in my county town of Steubenville, and I had seen him, and knew him well by reputation, though I could then claim no personal acquaintance. We were seated, after he had shaken each of us warmly by the hand and uttered words of greeting and compliment. We talked for a considerable time, not so much on the subject of our expedition—for I took it for granted that, lawyer like, he had looked over the evidence in the case and made up his mind about it—as upon general topics, such as our impressions of the south and the Union men in it, and of our home and feelings about the war. I was especially struck by his saying as how we had liked Gen. Mitchel as a commander, and when we spoke of him with unstinted enthusiasm he seemed greatly pleased, and said: "That's the way all his men talk about him." He told us that he had been aware of our expedition at the time, but had no accurate information of the fate of the party. His impression was that all had perished at first. On the escape of the eight in October he had made official inquiries of the Confederate government about us, but had been answered that they had no information of the hanging of any of the party.

He had then threatened retaliation in case one of us was hung, and had endeavored to effect buy exchange, he was very glad indeed that those efforts had succeeded, and surprised us by saying, "You will find your rooms ready for you when you go home." Then added many kind words about the high appreciation of our services by the government, which, coming from the secretary of war of a great nation to private soldiers, was most flattering. Stanton seemed especially pleased with Parrott. He was the youngest of our number and of very quiet and simple manners. Stanton gave him the offer of a complete education if he would accept it—I understood him to mean at West Point. Parrott answered that while the war lasted he did not wish to go to school, but would rather go back and fight the rebels who had used him so badly. At this Stanton smiled, as if he greatly approved his spirit, and said to him, "If you want a friend at any time be sure to apply to me." Then, going into another room he brought out a medal and handed it to Parrott, saying, "Congress has by a recent law ordered medals to be prepared on this model, and your party shall have the first; they will be the first that have been given to private soldiers in this war." Later all the survivors of the party received similar medals. Then he gave us a present of $100 each from the secret service fund, and returned all the money and the value of arms and property taken from us by the rebels to be refunded. Finally he asked us about our wishes and intentions for the future. Finding that we were all resolved to return to active service by offered us commissions as first lieutenants in the regular army. We expressed a preference for the volunteer service, saying that we were soldiers only for the war and would wish to resume our usual pursuits when peace returned. He promised to request Governor Todd, of Ohio, to give us equivalent commissions in our own regiments. Then with a hearty goodby we left him.

We had been invited to call upon the president the same day, and Gen. Hitchcock accompanied us on this pleasant mission. My companions had done a little jesting about being idle now to show the how much. I was mistaken in trying to impose upon them the tall, plain stranger we had met at the Smithsonian institution without any guard, such as the southern papers said always attended him, for the great and good Abraham Lincoln, which I enjoyed as much as they did. A still greater crowd than at the war office was awaiting admission; but as we came by appointment we had the preference and were conducted immediately to the private office of the president. We did feel some little embarrassment, but this scarcely accompanied us over the threshold.

The office was very plainly furnished. There was a long table and some chairs, but scarcely anything else. Lincoln met us at the door, greeted us warmly, and told us how much he had been interested in hearing of our adventures and how glad he was that we had at last escaped from the hands of the enemy. We answered as well as we could. I remember telling him that we were very glad to see him, though we had been hearing a great many things not complimentary about him for the past year. He smiled, saying: "Indeed, there are a good many people up here that say about as bad things of me." I also mentioned the reason that the other members of the party would not believe that he was the man we met at the Smithsonian, which caused him to laugh heartily and ask if we really imagined he went everywhere with a great guard parading after him, and if the people of the south believed all the stories printed in their papers? While talking he did not keep one position, but shifted from place to place, going from one to another of us, as he addressed each one with great courtesy. I specially remember part of one remark and his position while making it. Something had been said about political matters, and our joy that the Union party was now gaining in the country after the great defeats of the fall before. "Yes," Lincoln said, as he stood in a stooping position by the fireplace with his elbow resting on the end of the mantlepiece, "if we could only have a little luck with the battles now, all would soon be right and the war be over." The quaint phrase, "a little luck with the battles," made an indelible impression on my memory, for we had been having very ill luck in that direction for some time. We did not wish to be tiresome, and ourselves made the first motion to leave; the president took the hand of each in both his own, saying again how thankful he was that we had been spared, and that he hoped we would find all our relatives living and well when we reached home. We left him, exceedingly proud of the honor the greatest man in the nation for the world had conferred upon us. We had now nothing further to detain us in Washington, and were most anxious to be in Ohio again. A furlough for sixty days was given to us and an order for government transportation to our homes.

[THE END.]

INTERVIEW WITH PRESIDENT LINCOLN. "A LITTLE LUCK WITH THE BATTLES NOW."

Renews Her Youth.

Mrs. Phoebe Chapley, Peterson, Cady Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the leading citizens of the town: I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years, could not sleep nor walk without pain. Now I am free from all pain and soreness; and now able to do all my own housework and owe my thanks to Electric Bitters. I believe it has renewed my youth, and for blood, kidneys, and all disease are gone." Try a bottle, only 50c. at

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unprecedented demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant upon Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame, every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Prices 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

WEST FRANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB.

This Club was organized in April, 1887, and, with one or two exceptions, has held a meeting once each month since that time.

The last meeting was held at Mr. Wm. Penticost's, April 13th. Pres. Osborn opened by saying that, as people in every other profession have organized to protect their business, it is time for farmers to have similar associations, at which they may discuss the best methods of conducting their farms in the most successful manner, and these club meetings supply that want.

The Secretary being absent, C. D. Crittenden was chosen secretary pro tem.

After the reading of the minutes of the last meeting, the program was opened with music by Mr. F. Grey's orchestra, of which we have reason to be proud.

Miss Blanche Crittenden then recited "Kate Kitchen" which showed very forcibly that marrying for money does not generally pay.

Music by Mr F. Grey.

An essay entitled, "The Social Element," was then read by Mrs. Mart Perkins, who said society creates within us an interest in our fellow men, and this interest is manifested the most by united exertions, which these meetings accomplish. Our homes should be made attractive; society banishes old fashioned notions.

Mrs. C. Kemp, whose reputation as an elocutionist is more than local, gave a fine selection, which was followed with music by Mr. Grey.

A pleasing recitation by Miss Lona Butrick showed the effect of a boarding school upon a young lady.

A reading, entitled, "Woman's Intellect," by Mrs. H. C. Daniels, said ladies should spend more time in improving their minds, and less upon fancy work.

A paper entitled, "Poultry Raising" was read by Mr. E. C. Cook, who thought mixed breeds pay best.

After recess, the discussion of the paper previously read, was opened by Mr. C. Cooper, who said success in any profession is won by those who make an earnest effort to excel; a good warm hennery should be constructed and fowls be fed freely in winter. From 100 hens he had realized $50 in the last three months.

Mr. H. C. Daniels asked what kind of fowls and food secured the best results.

Mr. Cooper considered mixed breeds the most profitable. Cleanliness is indispensable.

Mr. Daniels thought the insects caused cholera.

Mr R. W. Mills had found soda and salts mixed with the food, to be a cure for cholera.

Mr. A. Vanderpool believes the large fowls to be good layers, and are more profitable for market than the smaller kinds.

Mr. Cooper said carbolic acid would effectually destroy the insects.

Pres. Osborn thought the Bronze turkeys and Plymouth Rocks the most profitable for market.

After more music, the program for the next meeting was read.

Mr. Wm. Pentecost's home was named "Pleasant Vale."

The meeting then adjourned, to meet at Mr. John Pentecost's, May 25th, and a cordial invite is extended to all.

PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

The prohibition convention for the county of Lenawee will be held at Dean's Opera House, Adrian, on Wednesday, May 2nd, at 11 A. M. for the purpose of electing delegates to the state convention to be held at Grand Rapids, May 16. Also to elect a new county committee for the next two years.

Each township and ward will be entitled to six delegates with alternates. All citizens interested in the enforcement of present laws and who believe in constitutional and statutory prohibition, state and national, are invited to be present. A meeting of the County Committee will be held at 10 o'clock A. M.

Mrs. Lathrop will address the convention in the afternoon and a mass meeting in the evening.

ROSCOE CONKLING.

The distinguished Ex-Senator from New York died in New York City early Tuesday morning after a painful illness of several days.

Roscoe Conkling was born in Albany, N. Y., October 30, 1829, and after a liberal education removed to Utica and engaged in the practice of law. In 1858 he was elected mayor of the city, and subsequently served his district eight years in the lower house of congress. Here he acquired a national reputation, and it was while a member of this branch of the national congress that the trouble between him and Mr. Blaine occurred, and which has not yet been healed. Blaine referred in a public debate to Mr. Conkling as affecting the strut of a turkey gobbler. In 1867 Mr. Conkling was elected to the United States senate, and was re-elected in 1873 and 1879. In 1880 Mr. Conkling was an ardent Grant man. Upon the nomination of Garfield he showed signs of sulking, and at the nominee's suggestion Conkling went to Mentor, where an amicable arrangement was made, and Mr. Conkling lent his aid to the election of the Republican ticket. After the inauguration Conkling undertook to control the official patronage of New York, and it has always been a mooted question whether or not Garfield had not promised him as much at the Mentor meeting. Be that as it may, Garfield removed Conkling's friend Merritt from the New York custom house, and appointed W. H. Robertson, a well known "featherhead," to the place. Conkling was indignant at the "insult" as he deemed it, and after conferring with a number of friends he and his colleague, Thos. C. Platt, resigned. This was on May 14, 1881. Conkling and Platt immediately went to Albany and demanded a vindication at the hands of the legislature. The balloting was continued two months and resulted in the election of Warner Miller and Elbridge G. Lapham. Growing out of this long continued fight was a charge of corruption against State Senator Sessions, who was accused of offering money to secure the election of Chauncey Depew. Upon his defeat by the legislature, Mr. Conkling re-engaged in the active practice of the law, since which time he has been employed in many important cases, his practice paying him about $100,000 per annum. Conkling is a brother in law of the late Horatio Seymour. General Grant tendered an associate judgeship to Mr. Conkling in 1874, but it was peremptorily refused.

DYSPEPSIA or indigestion always yields to the curative properties of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup, containing as it does nature's specific for the stomach.

HABITUAL constipation can be entirely cured by the use of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup after all other remedies have failed.

Mother, do you know anything of that Balsam everybody is talking so much about? Do you refer to Hibbard's Throat and Lung Balsam? Yes, that's what I mean. Well, I believe it is the best medicine in the world for a cough, cold or sore lungs, and is so pleasant to take. Your father took a severe cold day before yesterday, and is well to-day.

The new room for the telephone office is now in readiness at Marks & Russell's drug store. It will afford very convenient quarters for the office.

Will Anderson has been making several improvements in the interior of his store. Among others he has taken out the ice chest which gives him much more room for goods.

Geo. W. Larwill's story in the Evening News, of last week, is a very creditable bit of fiction indeed. We would respectfully suggest that Bro. Larwill should cultivate his talent in this direction.

The Ladies Social of the Universalist church, will meet at the residence of Mr. Albert Hyde, on Chicago st., to-morrow afternoon, April 20. All are cordially invited.

L. LOANA STACY, Sec.

Chas. Keysor took possession of his new quarters on Monday, and will hereafter conduct the tonsorial rooms heretofore occupied by James A. Curry. Mr. Keysor is well posted in the business and he will have good assistance in Vint Chapman and Ed. Holdway. Success to him.

The sheep breeders and wool growers and stock raisers of the township of Cambridge, will hold their annual shearing festival and stock exhibition at the residence of C. W. Greenleaf's, on Tuesday, May 1st, 1888. All are cordially invited to attend.

O. L. SHORT, President,
GEORGE KILBURY, Sec.

In consequence of the uncertainty as to the duration of the steadily spreading railroad strike in the North Central States, it has been decided to postpone the meeting of the Anti-Saloon Republican National Conference two weeks. The new date is Wednesday, May 2, at 11 A. M., and the sessions, which will continue through two days, will be held in Cooper Institute, in New York city.

The fact that Mr. Brown's twin girls were born on President Cleveland's birth day was what suggested the idea of asking the President to name them. It was a rather peculiar coincidence. He did not make the request to seek notoriety nor to establish a precedent for future cases of a like character. People in the village understand the circumstances, but as our item of last week is going the rounds of the papers, we think this explanation is due to Mr. Brown.

The Adrian Press takes a Tecumseh clergyman to task for voting a Republican ticket after having talked prohibition. We believe in rendering exact justice to all men, whether they be Republicans, Democrats, or Prohibitionists. The clergyman spoken of, as we understand it, favored the prohibitory amendment and also local option but he had never identified himself with the third party. He voted the Republican ticket this spring, as he always had done. We can see no inconsistency in this course. Hundreds of temperance men all over the state voted for non-partisan prohibition who do not look with favor upon the third party movement.

G. P. Sparks will sell at auction, at his residence on Maumee street, one block north of steam flouring mill, on Saturday next, 21st, at 1 o'clock sharp, all his household furniture and goods of every description; also stuffed birds, oil paintings, 1 top buggy, office writing desk, second hand sewing machine, 1 family fruit dryer, etc. Nothing will be sold at private sale, prior to auction. You will not have to bid on cullings. All are invited to call Friday and examine the many useful and beautiful articles they can buy on Saturday at their own prices. This is a rare opportunity for young house keepers; and also to furnish your lake cottages, at small cost. Should it storm on Saturday so as to interfere with the sale, it will take place on Tuesday following at same hour.

BY ORDER EXECUTIVE COM.

Every week there comes something unique and new in millinery, especially in hats, a few of the names which are, the torpedo, monitor, signal, shapeless and indifferent shades. Also the ombre and glasie ribbons and flowers to match. Feathers in profusion. Call and inspect the stock.

MRS. N. R. BROWN.

Dr. Bennett will be at Lilley House on Monday, April 23d. Remember he always gets here, never missing that fourth Monday. He does what he claims in every instance. It would do some of you complaining ones good to go and talk with him, if nothing more. How much longer are you ruptured ones going to stay away, saying "Oh, pshaw," when he cures everyone he is treating and he treats them every week.

We paid a visit the other day to Frank Silver's stables on Railroad street and found him feeling quite elated over the brisk opening of business. Banker and Bulletin are both gaining an extended reputation. Six of Bulletin's colts have already put in an appearance this spring, all of which give unusual promise. Many of Banker's colts have already developed into splendid trotters, and they are held in demand at high prices. Mr. Silvers looks forward to a very busy and successful season this year.

THE BI. CLUB DANCE.

The Tecumseh Bi. Club in connection with the T. A. A. will hold their second annual May party at the Opera House, on Tuesday evening, May 1st. Wolfe's full orchestra, of Toledo, will furnish the music and no pains will be spared to make it one of the most entertaining social events of the season. The young men in charge have had experience in this direction before and all the details will be properly attended to, to insure a fine party. Although the party is gotten up by the kids, the "old folks" must not consider that they are excluded. All dancers will be welcomed whether they be sixteen or sixty. The bill has been placed at $1.50 which is very reasonable, considering the expenses attending the party. R. C. VanAntwerp will officiate as caterer, and it is needless to say that this part of the program will be well carried out.

The following committees have been appointed, who will have charge of all the arrangements:

Invitation—P. A. Fitzsimmons, Al. Heesen, Bert Baker, S. W. Anderson, Chas. Orr, Fred Tiffany, Gus. Cummins.

Arrangements—L. B. Stewart, W. H. Hayden, Fred Tiffany, O. P. Bills, J. M. Hayden, P. A. Fitzsimmons, John Anderson.

Decoration Committee—Both of the above.

Floor Committee—Bert Garling house, Augustus Cummins, Alfred Heesen, Lester Tribou.

HYMENIAL.

It was an occasion of more than usual importance. That is, as a wedding affair, it stands several degrees which ever occurred in this immediate vicinity, so far as the memory of man runneth, which we say without any desire to be sensational. A plain statement of the case reads as follows: At the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Underwood, on the afternoon of Wednesday, April 11th, their daughter Miss Velina Underwood was united in marriage with Mr. Geo. H. Winship, of Raisin, the Rev. Wm. H. Benton, M. E. pastor, of Ridgeway, officiating, in the presence of about two hundred and seven invited guests. Of the contracting parties it may be stated: Miss Underwood is a lady of very estimable character, having a very large circle of friends and many acquaintances. She is well educated and a highly accomplished young lady; has been engaged for several years in a public capacity as teacher of music, and in her chosen vocation has won the commendation, "success." Mr. Winship comes from one of the pioneer families of Lenawee County, well and favorably known at Adrian and throughout the county, the son of L. C. Winship, an ex-member of the County Board and grandson of W. L. Winship. Of the time and place we will say, first, that it was the first public opening of the magnificent and spacious residence of Mr. Underwood, lately erected upon his farm of 240 acres, closely adjacent to the village of Ridgeway. About said residence something more may be said at some future time, as it is without any doubt one of the finest and largest farm residences to be found anywhere in the State of Michigan; spacious enough to accommodate 200 guests without crowding and elegant enough to fully satisfy the aesthetic taste of the most aesthetic granger. The bride was very elegantly attired in a dress of white surah silk. White passmenterie and pearl ornaments formed the trimmings. This tasteful costume was further enriched with clusters of smilax and white carnations, with which her hair was also dressed, and the whole appearance may properly be said to be recherche. The groom, quite superbly dressed gave the impression of being rather more his mother's than his father's boy, which was confirmed by a remark of the elder Winship, and is referred to only as a compliment. A wedding march was given by Mrs. Winship, of Adrian, while the bridal party were being conducted to the altar, immediately under an arch of evergreen, from which extended a horse shoe formed with flowers. The bride's maids were Miss Carrie Winship, of Raisin, and Miss Lillie Morrell, of Macon, and the groom's men were Mr. J. S. Ingersol, of Detroit, and Mr. Cyrus Underwood, brother of the bride. The ceremonial was orthodox, the latest approved, very impressive and beautiful, and when ended the pastor made an appeal to the young people present to join in singing, "This is the way I long have sought, etc." Of the guests, mention may be made of Mrs. Tidswell, Mr. G. Wethers and Mrs. Winship, of Adrian; the two Misses McComb, and Dr. Morse, of Ogden Center; Mrs. Hinckley, son and daughter, of Fairfield, and Mrs. Service and son, of Sand Creek. The Raisin Glee Club were also present and made the walls ring with a few appropriate selections exceedingly well rendered. Mrs. Winship, of Adrian, entertained the company with some very choice selections of music, both vocal and instrumental. Refreshments began to be served at eight o'clock, the hospitalities of Mr. and Mrs. Underwood exceeding that of all other occasions in Ridgeway of this kind for several years.

The bride and groom were the recipients of the following choice and elegant presents.

Constipation

Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the temporary relief they afford is followed by greater constipation. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their effect always beneficial. They are an admirable laxative and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.

"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make daily use of them in my practice."—Dr. I. E. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leithsville, Pa.

"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them the best."

Effective Remedy

for constipation and indigestion, and "we never without them in the house." Moses Grenier, Lowell, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—D. Burke, St. Louis, Mo.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years, and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."—James Quinn, 90 Middlest., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with costiveness, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrive at this conclusion only after a thorough test of their merits."—Samuel J. Jones, Cor. 4th St., Boston, Mass.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON FOR APRIL 22d. 1888.

THE TEN VIRGINS.—MATT. 25, 1-13.

NOTES.—"Then."—When the Son of Man shall come.——"Virgins."—There is no special significance in their being virgins. It is part of the beautiful drapery of the parable; nor is there any special meaning in the number ten. The Jews delighted in that number, and it might have been the usual number of brides-maids.——"Lamps."—They were more suitable to women than torches, and besides, if rightly taken care of, would burn longer.——"To meet the bridegroom." His is the real coming. The earth as containing the church universal and all the elect are the bride.——"For the foolish when they took their lamps took no oil with them."—They had, like the wise, plenty of oil in their lamps to start with, but unlike the wise virgins took no vessels or cruses to carry oil with them. These cruses must have been quite heavy and cumberson; many were elaborately ornamented. It was an act of patience to carry this extra load. The wise took that precaution. The foolish were so because they trusted to luck. They shirked their full responsibility in this vital matter.——"They all slumbered and slept."—Resting in some convenient house by the way where the bridegroom was to pass by, they firs nodded and then finally dropped off into a sleep. The virgins are here not blamed for sleeping. They slept whilejothers watched. The vigil was divided.——"Trimmed their lamps."—Trimmed the wicks, for they had been burning all this while, and refilled them with oil.——"Peradventure."—Let us follow Meyer in the translation of this passage; it is a little more vivid: "Never (shall we give you our oil;) there will certainly not be enough for us and you."——"The bridegroom came."—To the house of the bride to be married.——"Lord, Lord."—Expressive of most urgent entreaty.——"I know you not."—The verily introduces here as elsewhere a most emphatic statement. They were not there to welcome him. They had missed their appointment as brides-maids Henceforth they were to him as strangers. The penalty is here attached to unfaithfulness not only as a punishment but also to bring into clearer light his reward to the watchful ones.

INSTRUCTION.—With what strains of exultation the virgins start forth to welcome their lord! The mighty procession still moves onward. With joy and zeal enthusiastic worshippers march to meet the bridegroom. Who are they that lag behind and beg the strong to carry them? They are the fools who would not fill their pouches with the bread of life, though it was a free gift—fools again, who would not fill their gourds with the water of life, freely given to all that might thirst no more. Man cannot supply these necessities, only God. Such folly meets us on every side. Both sexes fall into it. Let us warn others and be wise ourselves.

This lesson teaches that "moral preparedness" must be continued until the very hour of the second coming of our Lord. Watchfulness must not be intermittent but lasting till the end. And if by some mishap of our own carelessness, or through lack of foresight, or through spiritual drowsiness we are off our guard and are surprised, unprepared to give him the reception which is his due, then we shall find that this woful neglect will be punished by exclusion from his Kingdom.

Wisdom we find to-day consists in being far-sighted, in providing for an emergency and then accepting it. The wise virgins had the knowledge that lamps could not burn forever without oil, also that the bridegroom might be indefinitely delayed; then they applied their wits and ingenuity to the solution of the problem. The same problem confronts us. We have the key. It is child's play to find the answer. It requires simply faith and patience.

The folly of the five who took no oil was consummate and audacious in the extreme. In the first place they trusted to sheer luck, hoping that the arrival might be within the petty limit of their lamp capacity. Secondly, they made up their minds to sponge upon their more prudent sisters for supplies when theirs got low. They were not only careless but perfectly willing to hang on their friends for maintenance. We should take the greatest care least we unconsciously fall into the same sin. We must fight our own battles, form our own characters, make the decisive step ourselves that shall bring us into the bridal chamber, and not expect others to do it for us. There are some things we are solely responsible for. To keep our temples bright for his coming, is one of them, nay, it is the first.

One of the wisest things the other did was to refuse them. It would have been destruction to them if they had complied. All they could do was to indicate to where oil could be bought. That was a privilege. Each [illegible] oil is good for him, and for him [illegible]. It can save none else. He [illegible] only point and pray as he [illegible] his finger upward.

IMPURE FOOD.

Exceeding caution should be exercised in the purchase of a new article of food. Many recent cases of serious illness have been reported from the use of the new patent foods for infants. [illegible] cheap flavoring extracts. The desire for rapid wealth induces unscrupulous manufacturers to place anything before the public that will sell at a large profit, without regard to its usefulness. At present there is a great raid upon the baking powder market, and so many impure and adulterated articles of this kind have been found peddled about the country that the authorities in several of the States have taken the necessary action to expose them. The report of the Ohio State Food Commission has shown that a large number of the brands sold here are made from alum, phosphates or a cheap adulterated cream of tartar. The danger to the public is made still greater by the unblushing effrontery with which the proprietors of these impure powders advertise them as perfect, claiming for them all kinds of false and impossible endorsements.

The official report of the Ohio State Food Commission gives the names of a number of these impure powders, and the amount of impurity and inert matter in each as follows:

Name.	Per Cent of Impurities, Etc.
Dr. Price's	12.66
Sterling	12 63
Pearson's	14 39
Scioto (alum)	18.25
Forest City (alum)	24.04
Crown (alum)	25.09
Silver Star (alum)	31.88
DeLand's	32.52
Horsford's (phosphate)	36 49
Kenton (alum)	38.17
Patapsco (alum)	40.08
One Spoon (alum)	58.68

The impurities in the powders above mentioned were found to consist of various matters more or less hurtful. In Dr. Price's powder the principal impurities were lime and Rochelle salts, which were found in large quantities. The impurities in Horsford's powder were composed of phosphate of soda, lime, etc., but none of the "nutritious phosphates," without which its manufacturers claim life cannot be sustained. The impurities found in the other powders named were principally alum and lime.

From the report of the Commission it is evident that the Royal Baking Powder is of the highest degree of strength and purity.

She conquers her prejudice and acknowledges her error.—Mrs. Annie Skinner who is greatly esteemed in that part of Maryland known as the "Eastern Shore," is one lady at least who is equal to the courage of her convictions. She has put herself on record as conquering her prejudices and acknowledging her error. It requires an immense amount of moral courage to acknowledge a fault and she should be honored for it. She writes us that her father being a medical practitioner she had early imbibed a dislike to all patent medicines but that experience and observation had taught her that it was a foolish prejudice. She adds, that she now regards Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup as a medicine so valuable as to be a necessity in every family. She particularly commends it for croup and writes as follows:

"I have used Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup in my family for some time with the most satisfactory results. It is the best croup remedy I have ever tried, and so pleasant to the taste, that children take it without persuasion. I have seen it used in cases of asthma and lung affection with salutary effect. I have cured many serious colds by its timely use. It should be taken when the first symptoms of the trouble are perceived, and hence should be kept constantly on hand. My father being a physician, I naturally imbibed an early dislike to all kinds of patent medicines, but experience and observation have taught me that this was a foolish prejudice, and I now regard Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup as a medicine so valuable as to be a necessity in every family.

NOT MADE OF GREEN CHEESE.

How a Little Girl Disproved Her Grandpa's Statement.

Children sometimes astonish their elders with their acuteness of reasoning. Don't put the little ones off too easily, or tell them some plausible story, when they come with their questions, but give them a chance, as did the sensible grandfather in the following anecdote, and perhaps they'll find out a reason as good as you could yourself:

A little girl, 6 years old was on a visit to her grandfather, who was a New England divine, celebrated for his logical powers.

"Only think, grandpa, what Uncle Robert says!"

"What does he say, my dear?"

"Why, he says the moon is made out of green cheese. It isn't at all, is it?"

"Well, child, suppose you find out yourself."

"How can I, grandpa?"

"Get your Bible and see what it says."

"Where shall I begin?"

"Begin at the beginning."

The child sat down to read the Bible. Before she got more than half way through the second chapter of Genesis, and had read about the creation of the stars and the animals, she came back to her grandfather, her eyes all bright with the excitement of discovery. "I've found it, grandpa. It isn't true, for God made the moon before he made the cows."

Give Him $2.00, And Let Him Guess.

We once heard a man complain of feeling badly and wondered what ailed him. A humorous friend said, "Give a doctor $2, and guess." It was a cutting satire on some doctors, who don't always guess right. "You need not guess what ails you when your food don't digest, when your bowels and stomach are inactive, and when your head aches every day, and you are languid and easily fatigued. You are billious, and Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets will bring you out all right. Small sugar-coated, easy to take. Of druggists.

One can almost hear the grass begin to grow.

FOR MOURNERS.

Suggestions About What Kind of Wraps to Wear.

Wraps for wearing with first-mourning dresses are made of the material of the dress worn, [illegible] crape, and there may be either short mantles or long cloaks. There is, however, a preference for long cloaks made of fine camel's hair softly lined with wadded silk and trimmed with black fox fur, or the Persian lamb fur, arranged as a deep collar and cuffs, and in bands down the entire front, and also in the back below the waist. Excellent soft and thick cloths for long cloaks for those in mourning have either a plain diagonal surface or else they are picked out with tiny dots or a fine fine trellised pattern done in mohair threads that are not quite as glossy as silk; these are interlined with flannels above the waist, and lined throughout with black silk serge. The fur, whether of fox, lynx, or Persian lamb, is put on lengthwise, but not across the foot. For wearing with tailor gowns of Cheviot or cloth a single-breasted jacket is made of heavy black diagonal cloth, and with it is worn a black fox victorine made with a standing collar, that widens into a vest which extends to the waist line, where a flat muff is attached to it and trimmed with a large bow of ribbon. A narrow binding of Persian lamb or of the caracal or Russian lamb fur trims other coats, and above this are rows of braid. A short elbow cape of either of the fashionable black furs is liked with short coats, or with the long cloaks that are tightly fitted.

Had Been Worried Eighteen Years.

It should have read "married," but the proof-reader observed "that it amounted to about the same thing, and so did not draw the blue pencil through the error. Unfortunately there was considerable truth in his observation. Thousands of husbands are constantly worried almost to despair by the ill health that afflicts their wives, and often rob life of comfort and happiness. There is but one safe and sure way to change all this for the better. The ladies should use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Don't Experiment.

You cannot afford to waste time in experimenting when your lungs are in danger. Consumption always seems, at first only a cold. Do not permit any dealer to impose upon you with some cheap imitation of Dr King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, but be sure you get the genuine. Because he can make more profit he may tell you he has something just as good, or just the same. Don't be deceived, but insist upon getting King's New Discovery, which is guaranteed to give relief in all Throat, Lung and Chest affections. Trial bottles free. Large bottles $1.

A Modest Woman

often shrinks from consulting a physician about functional derangement and prefers to suffer in silence. This may be a mistaken feeling, but it is one which is largely prevalent. To all such women we would say that one of the most skillful physicians of the day, who has had a vast experience in curing diseases peculiar to women, has prepared a remedy which is of inestimable value. We refer to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This is the only remedy for woman's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfactoin in every case or money refunded. See guarantee printed on bottle wrapper.

Champion Short Hand Writer.

Mr. A. S. White, the well-known author of "White's Phonography," famous as the Champion Shorthand Writer of the World, received the first prizes in the international contests at London, Edinburgh, Paris and Berlin; he came near being permanently disabled by rheumatism. His recovery by the use of a remedy infallible in curing rheumatism and all blood diseases is told in a letter from his office, 92 Washington st., Chicago, dated June 20, 1887. He writes:

"Your remedy has done wonderful service for me. For the past five years I have been troubled with rheumatic pains.

"My right hand had become almost useless and I was gradually losing speed as a shorthand writer. A friend of mine, Dr. Dederich, advised me of your remedy. I used a dozen bottles of S. S. and am now entirely recovered. I shall never cease to commend your excellent medicines, and wish you much success.

"Yours truly, A. S. WHITE"

And here is another witness:

"BENTON, Ark., August 25th, 1887.

"Last spring I was dangerously afflicted with erysipelas, and my life was despaired of by my physicians. As a last hope I tried S. S. S. and soon found relief, and in two weeks was able to attend to my business. I used five bottles.

Learned Professors Say.

The most serious diseases of the heart, says Prof. Da Costa, may occur without any symptoms. Prof. Trousseau, of Paris, states that death from heart disease is usually caused by congestion of the lungs, liver, stomach or kidneys, from imperfect circulation of the blood. Dr. Miles' New Cure for the Heart is the latest and most reliable remedy for this little understood but grave disease. It has cured thousands of cases. Don't fail to try it. Ask for testimonals. When in the act of unloading some large stone he slipped and had one of his legs broken very badly. When he reached home surgeon W. H. Arner repaired the broken part to its future durability. (It was one of his crutches that met with the misfortune.)

Uncle Thomas Allison, who has been in feeble health for the past few years, has for the last few days failed very fast and suffered at times beyond self-control. He pased away a little after 12 o'clock Sunday, at the age of 78 years 1 month and 6 days. The deceased was born in England, March 16th 1810, when 18 years of age he emigrated to America, and after 17 weeks on the ocean he landed in New York. For five years he remained at Oswego, then came to the howling wilderness of Michigan and made it his home at Mr. Edmonds' for several years, working at various kinds of work. He helped to build the dam at the Globe Mills at Tecumseh. He was married to Miss Phebe Gifford, April 2d, 1838, and immediately began life's struggles as a pioneer in Ridgeway township. About the year 1853 he moved onto a piece of wild land in Macon township, where for 20 years he toiled early and late and cleared up a farm of 60 acres. He raised a family of seven boys and four girls, all of whom survive him, except one son who died during the rebellion as a volunteer. In 1872 he moved to the village where he has been living ever since. The funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at the church, conducted by Rev. W. H. Benton. The remains were interred in the village cemetery. There being six boys, all men grown, they acted as bearers, which presented a very effecting scene.

Card of Thanks.

Words fail to express our heartfelt appreciation to the neighbors and friends, also to the choir who so willingly furnished such valuable assistance during the last sickness and at the death and funeral of our husband and father.

MRS. THOS. ALLISON AND FAMILY.

The following is taken from the Detroit Tribune April 6th:

A very pleasing program was given yesterday afternoon at the Strelezki recital in the Detroit School of Music. Following were the selections played: Variations for two pianos, (St. Saens)—Miss Belle Barlow, Anton Strelezki; ballade, G minor, berceuse, barcarolle, etudes, tarentelle (Chopin)—Anton Strazelki; minuet and romance (B. Tours), tarantelle (Y. Scharwenka)—Misses Fanny and Emma Butzel; Carnival de Pesth, (List) Anton Strelezki.

Miss Belle Barlow of Ridgeway, Mich., is a pupil of Mr. Strelezki, and displayed excellent technique, a firm touch and precision in time, Chopin's ballade in G minor was given with great brilliancy, as was also the tarantelle, while the tender cadences of the barcarolle were treated with the poetic feeling which always characterizes Mr. Strelezki's interpretation of this composer, whose music, if one may make such a comparison, seems to be essentially the lyric poetry of melody. The remaining numbers were played with good effect. One more recitation will be given next Thursday.

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

Farmers are rushing the oats, peas and rye seeding. Wheat is drying up. Poor spring for clover seeding.

Sam Stewart's little girl fell from a fence fracturing an arm but is doing well at this writing.

Ella Whiting started Monday for Lima, Ohio, will be gone one week, returning via Sylvania.

Minnie Sisson went to Sanford Saturday to engage in dressmaking.

Jennie Osgood will commence her first school, in dist. No. 4, next Monday.

There was a young folks social at C. Shaler's last Monday evening.

Fred. Miller is blessed with a young son.

Theodore Karcher is carrying his hand in a sling, from being poisoned.

Macon Grange continues to boom—six candidates now on the course and more coming.

"The Prohibition Campaign rally at A. Easlick's Saturday evening, was a "rouser." Farmers left their plows and firesides with overcoats and mittens on, to boom the cause. A delegation from Ridgeway, headed by Hon. G. P. Waring and Dr. D. W. Loree, awelled the crowd. By the way, the Dr. is at the boiling point all the time. The meeting was in telegraphic communication with the Adrian Times office during the evening, and but for the waste basket and partisan opposition a glowing report of the proceedings might have been anticipated in Monday's daily—all of which shows the great necessity for a county organ. L. Osgood was chairman of the meeting with Dr. Loree as prompter; C. V. Skinner, secretary, assisted by Mr. Waring. The great want of the evening was a short-hand reporter. Delegates to the county convention at Adrian, May 2d, are J. W. Baker James Hatch, N. C. Miller, C. V. Skinner, Mr. Yates, A. Easlick. Regular meetings will be held the last Saturday evening in each month during the campaign, at the same time and place, unless changed by mutual consent. Special meeting subject to special call. Time and space forbids a further synopsis of the proceedings.

GOT THE BEST OF THE DOCTOR.

W. F. Beyer, Garretsville, Ohio, says: "My wife has been troubled with Catarrh a long time, but have, with what remedies we had, and what the doctor could do, kept the upper hand of it until this fall, when everything failed. Her throat was raw as far as one could see, with an incessant cough; when I invested my dollar in a bottle of your Papillon Catarrh Cure as a last resort. To day she is free from cough, throat all healed and entirely cured." Papillon (extract of flax) Catarrh Cure effects cures when all others fail. Large bottles $1.00.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for May

Is a valuable and interesting number of this favorite family monthly. Both solid and light reading, grave and gay, prose and verse, are found in its pages, and the many beautiful illustrations add to the interest and value of the text. "Luxurious Railroading," by Arthur Vaughan Abbot, is very entertainingly written, and conveys an immense amount of information, which is enhanced by the many illustrations accompanying it. Dr. Talmage's sermon is a striking one on "Thirst in a Cavern," and there are many other good things in verse and prose.

The best on earth can truly be said of Grigg's Glycerine Salve, which is a sure, safe and speedy cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. Will positively cure piles, tetter and all skin eruptions. Try this wonder healer. Satisfaction guaranteed, or money refunded. Only 25 cents. Sold by Dr. Geo. Furguson's.

CATARRH.—Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup is one of the finest laxatives in the world, moving the bowels effectively as well as mildly, without pain, griping or weakness.

TO THE TEACHERS OF LENAWEE COUNTY

The attention of district school teachers is called to the fact that the old Lenawee County Teachers' Association has been revived. A meeting was held in this city February 25th, and a second will occur May 5th, the program for which, with the place of meeting, etc., will be published in due time.

The benefits of such an association with its occasional meetings are such as the district school teacher needs more than any one else. Teachers in graded schools have avenues of information and contact with other experiences which the district teacher has not. There is always some one to whom the graded teacher can appeal, with whom doubtful points may be discussed, from whom hints may be gleaned and suggestions gathered. It is quite otherwise with the isolated district school teacher. She goes to her work day after day and week after week, unsupported by counsel or suggestion. There is no meeting with other teachers in the school house or on the road; no teachers' meeting: no chance to compare methods or seek aid; in short no opportunity to utilize the experience of others.

It is to afford such opportunities that the county association of teachers has been formed. The intention is to have discussed at its not too frequent meetings, subjects which come home to the business and hearts of the common school teachers, and such teachers are especially urged to attend. Come, and bring with you your questions, your knotty points, your useful experience and your happy thoughts. You wish you could think of some way to make history more interesting, or you wonder whether other teachers are so tired with whispering as you are, or you have thought of a new way of rewarding the little children, or of a good method of the writing books: come then, and talk over all these things with the other teachers with whom you will meet. For the association has a value aside from that of the papers and discussions, in its opportunities for social talk and comparison of views.—Adrian Times.

CHICAGO'S PRIDE!

Or, The Great War Picture of the Battle of Gettysburg.

"This Panorama is a heroic scene; telling more eloquently than printed page or magic tongue ever can, of the bravery of the soldiery on both sides who met in battle. Not one of unnumbered thousands who come to look upon it but must realize a thrill of national pride over this illustration of American bravery.

"The platform from which we view the marvelous picture is the stage of many delighted episodes—where men who confronted each other in this self same fight stand side by side reviewing it.

"The wide-reaching battle scene is so intensely thrilling, so awesome in its impression, that one feels for a time like looking upon it in silence.

"But Capt. White's explanations, which are given every hour, point out each Division, Brigade and Regiment and give the names of the officers leading them.

"Not a man visiting this Panorama who was in the battle but expresses amazement and admiration at the representation of it, while no one who has looked down from Cemetery Hill, the site of the National Cemetery, but will give testimony to the absolutely correct portrayal of the grand landscape."

WEDDING IN MACON.

The home of Joseph Mellon, of Macon, was on Wednesday evening, the 18th instant, made light and cheery when the marriage of their niece, Sarah Campbell, to Fred Kolkleseh, both of Tecumseh, took place at the hour of 8 o'clock. There were about twenty persons present to witness the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. Jas. Wright, of Britton. After congratulations and a few moments of pleasantry were passed, all repaired to a well loaded table. The newly married couple go immediately to their home in Tecumseh, where everything is in readiness for housekeeping.

The following is a list of the presents given

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, APRIL 26

A FARMER'S WIFE ON THE TARIFF.

The Farmer's Voice, reporting a farmer's institute gives the substance of a paper read by Mrs. J. H. Elliott on "The Farmer's Wife." Protection ists are invited to note the following suggestions as to the light in which the head of the farmer's household looks upon their pet tariff.

"Sometimes the farmer's wife, when she sits down to mend—just for a rest—her husband's woolen socks, reflects that if her Congressman had not levied such a tax on that pair of socks, she would have money to buy a new pair, instead of spending her time on the open territory of the old one.

"She thinks also what a relief it would be if she were not compelled to use the entire proceeds of her butter and eggs in paying the tax on the salt she puts in her butter, and on the sugar she uses in her coffee and fruit. The witty Senator from Kansas, Mr. Ingalls, gives as the only reason why women should not vote that they have sense enough not to want to vote. I confess I am just stupid enough to want to cast a ballot on the salt and sugar question, and if I ever get to voting I will by no means stop at salt and sugar.

"Did women vote in this country, I think it could be relied upon that the tax would be removed from what we use in the kitchen and remain upon whisky and tobacco.

"One word more to the farmers of Illinois. If your condition is such as generally confessed, if the condition of your wives approaches what I have indicated, may I not ask that you turn down your coat collar, shake the hay seed from your hair, and do something. If you are not brave enough to do it for yourselves, do it for the sake of your wives and children. You are numerically strong enough to redress all the grievances of which you are forever complaining. Don't be deluded any longer with the idea that it is your duty to provide ample dividends for every monopoly and manufacturing establishment in the country with the motive that you are patriotically supporting American industries. Agriculture is not recognized in the phrase "protection of American Industries," while it is the American industry of all others. It is the industry which is taxed to support all others. Speed the day when the Illinois farmer shall learn enough to know it. If is the American industry which you are called upon to look out for and protect, and if you don't do it you may be sure no one else will. The way to protect it is to correct the unjust legislation and taxation that are inflicted upon you almost without your protest. You cannot accomplish it, gentlemen, by simply raising large seed pumpkins. Your wives would like to see you march up to the polls, independent citizens, without being dragged up with the party halter about your own necks."

ABOUT FREE WOOL.

Some of the public journals which play the role of organ and seldom meet public issues with candor have defended or excused the proposition to make wool free by publishing figures to show that the price of wool has declined under high duties for its protection. If such arguments, or pretended arguments, mean anything it must be that the price of wool would not be reduced by placing wool on the free list. Of course, such discussion of the question is picturesque absurdity.

The avowed purpose of putting wool, ores, lumber, salt, etc., on the free list is to cheapen them to manufacturers and consumers. Hides were made free some fifteen years ago at a loss of about $1 50 per hide to every farmer who butchered his own beef, and it was done avowedly to cheapen the raw material needed by our leather and shoe industry. The result was the rapid growth of the leather and shoe industry until now we make all our own shoes, furnish them cheaper and of better quality, and export from eig it to ten millions of our products, while our farmers who lost a few dollars on their hides have gained vastly more by cheapened and better shoes and leather. No one would now think of restoring the duty on foreign hides, as it would greatly cripple one of our most important and successful industries.

Putting wool on the free list must necessarily cheapen the price of wool, and every farmer who grows sheep would lose more or less by the reduction of price just as they lost by the reduction of the price of hides; but everybody wears woolens from hat to socks, farmers included, and the articles most worn by industrial people, farmers, mechanics and workmen generally, are most taxed: If they would be more benefited by the reduction, the reduced cost of their hats, blankets, clothing, etc., than are the wool growers by the duty on wool, it must be obvious that wool should be on the free list.

There was no need of free wool ten years ago, and twenty years ago a high tax upon wool and all woolen goods worn was a necessity for revenue; but now our manufacturers are confronted by a new condition that demands the cheapest production of fabrics in common use, and free wool has become a practical necessity to aid our productive industries and cheapen the necessaries of life. Large wool growers would lose more than they could gain by free wool, but the average farmer wool-grower would be more than compensated by cheapened articles which he must consume, and the great mass of the people, and especially of industrial people, would largely profit by it. This is the plain, practical representation of the question, and the changed necessities of the present clearly demand the largest free list of raw materials for our productive industries.—Philadelphia Times.

A HUMBUG CANVAS.

Who is raising all this racket about free trade? Who has even proposed free trade, or intended that it is either practicable or desirable? The Democrats certainly have not, nor do they propose to. The free trade yell which is being raised in the ears of the people just before the canvass for the Presidency opens is the preliminary part of the program, and the Republican leaders and managers fancy it is going to curdle the blood of the average voter with fear. But nobody has so much as mentioned free trade except themselves, and they have to keep it going in order, to furnish an effective contrast to the high protection dogma which is all the stock in trade politically left to them.

We do not believe that this humbugging cry of free trade is going to produce any popular effect this year, unless it is that of weariness and disgust on the part of those whom it is the design to humbug. There is only one proposition before the country at this time, and that is the prudent and steady reduction of the revenue. The Republican speakers, instead of opposing it, set up the cry of 'stop thief' as they run away from it.—Boston Globe.

"Purgatory Bullets."

An excited Irishman lately rushed into a Boston drug store; having a "broken-up" appearance generally. "Be Jabers"? he yelled, "I'm all wrong entirely. I want some shtuff to straighten me out. Some o' thim 'Purgatory Bullets' will fix me, I'm thinkin'. What d'ye tax for thim"? "What do you mean"? asked the clerk. "Purgatory Bullets," sor, or somethin' loike that, they call thim," replied the man. "Shure, I'm in purgatory already, with headache, and liver complaint, and bad stomach and the devil knows what all." The clerk passed out a vial of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, and Pat went off contented. These little Pellets cure all derangements of the liver, stomache and bowels. Sugar coated, little larger than mustard seeds, and pleasant to take. Druggists.

Bogus Baking Powder Tests.

Rather ingenious but not less fraudulent are the pretended tests of baking powder being made in many of our kitchens by agents who are trying to further the sale of a Chicago article. These so-called tests consist in mixing separately, with water, a sample of the baking powder found in the house and that carried by the agent. From that found in the house, if a pure article, the bubbles of gas will rise and burst on top like those from a glass of champagne. The Chicago baking powder which they carry, when mixed with water, will show an extra froth upon the top of the mixture which is claimed as evidence of superiority. On the contrary, however, it is not only an exhibition of a trick, but is absolute proof that the baking powder which so acts is adulterated. The chemists have ascertained that the adulterant used is a chemical added for the express purpose of producing this action and deceiving housekeepers as to the real value of the baking powder. This is not only a dishonest trick, but a dirty one, for the chemical is the product of the filthy refuse of the slaughter house, and if this baking powder is used in the preparation of food passes into the biscuit or cake without change. Of course, any statements made in reference to other baking powders, by parties caught in practising such tricks as these for the purpose of deceiving the public, will be entitled to no credit.

It is probably wisest in the interest of our families, and to prevent our food from being contaminated by tramps of this kind, to turn all persons who wish or attempt to tamper with it unceremoniously from the door and to use those articles only which experience has proved satisfactory, or the ordinary tests have established as pure and wholesome.

There is no denying the fact that Dr. James Red Clover Tonic is the most successful blood purifier, ever put on the market. Its wonderful cures in all stomach, kidney and liver troubles has brought out many imitations. It restores debilitated nerve tissues, restoring the force lost by sickness, mental work or excessive use of liquor, opium and tobacco. Dr. Geo. Ferguson, will supply the genuine at 50 cents a bottle.

A WELL GROOMED GIRL.

How a Clever Mamma Carried Her Daughter Through a Season.

"There are few things in the world tougher for a woman than the Washington season," said a Senator in Washington the other day. "You remember Miss Seabright, do you not?

"The girl who married the Baston lawyer last year? Yes, I remember her."

"Well, Miss Seabright was not tough. She was willowy and fragile—just the girl for Washington to kill off in one season. And her mother knew it and that knowledge is what saved Miss Seabright. She brought the young lady here to put her through a course of Washington society, to have her see it and love her, and maybe the old lady, and not so very old either, had some idea of the Boston denouement; who knows? At any rate she took the girl—Chloe, I think she was called—and watched her all winter as an anxious nurse would watch a patient. She sent her out into society with her and she did the heavy work at home. She kept everybody still and compelled favorable and soothing conditions so that Chloe could sleep till 12. Then she lifted her up from bed and carried her to the bath and bathed her, permitting the girl to make no exertion herself. She rubbed her with dry towels, clothed her, fed her with nourishing food, and in the afternoon made the grand rounds as her escort. At 5 o'clock she brought her charge home, fed her and put her carefully to bed, watching at her bedside. An hour before the time of setting out for the grand rounds she woke her gave her a bath, and prepared her for exertion. She kept that girl alive that winter by grooming her constantly with exactly the same care that Sullivan's trainer bestows on him before a prize fight or a jockey gives a race horse of Epsom Downs. And in the spring, when everybody else was jaded out and sick and ready to drop, Chloe was as spry as a cricket, though without strength enough to refuse Cartwright. That's just the way all mothers ought to manage their society girls."

Wether in the north, south, east, or west Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup always makes a first-class record. One writes it has cured my cough and cold; another has cured sore throat, hoarseness and catarrh; a third has had a similar experience in cases of whooping-cough and croup, and so you may run the whole gamut of these and kindred affections and we have testimonials of cures in all cases. With one accord they "tell all the same unvarying tale." No wonder the people believe in Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. No wonder they will have it "if the heaven's fall." A gentleman from the metropolitan city of the Palmetto State shows his gratitude of what it has done for him in the following appreciative terms:

"This is to express my sincere thanks for the benefit I have experienced from the use of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. I had a severe aggravating cough so that I could scarcely talk—after using one small bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, it not only cured my cough but strengthened my sore chest. I take great pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Syrup and heartily recommend it."

Two physicians of Morris, Ill., told E. W. Huell that he was beyond the help of medicine or medical skill from seated lung disease contracted in a cold rain. Was induced to try Dr. Bigelow's Cough Cure, two bottles of which completed a cure. Over a year has elapsed and he is in excellent health, doing hard work on his farm. Dr. Bigelow's Positive Cure is the only known consumption cure. Sold by Dr. Geo. Ferguson in fifty cent and dollar bottles. Get the genuine. Pleasant for children.

Elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1.00 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

A Dressmaker's Experience.

DEAR SIR:—As Mr. Hinman, the druggist, told you I am a great friend of your remedy. I have used it at intervals during the past 12 years. It carried me safely through the critical period of change of life without a single sick day and it did great things for me in many ways.

I always recommended it where I saw a case that needs it. It always does splendidly, often accomplishing more than you have ever claimed for it, and more than any one would readily believe who did not personally know the cases.

I now consider myself well, but I work hard at my business—dress making—and when I am tired and nervous, a spoonful dose of ZoaPhora quiets and rests me. I always have it in my house. Yours truly,

MRS. MARY C. CHANDLER.

Bath, Clinton Co., Mich., February 20, 1886. To H. G. Coleman, Secretary. N. B.—It is equally good at all times of life.

Disease of Heart Disease.

Many eminent men, among them Mr. Vanderbilt, Sir Garnet Wolseley, Gen. McClellan and Josh Billings, died of heart disease last year. Authorities state that one person in fifty has it, though few know it. The symptoms are shortness of breath, palpitation, tenderness in side, palpitation, choked or smothered feeling in the chest, tendency to faint, swelling of feet, nervousness, etc. If you have any of these symptoms do not fail to try Dr. Miles' New Cure for the Heart. For sale at Baker & Hall's Drug Store.

Professional Ignorance

Nothing is more common, nor less true, than for physicians to tell patients in the first stages of heart disease that the trouble is only nervous, etc., and of no account. A little knowledge is a dangerous thing as shown by the great number of people who die of heart disease when its existence is not expected. [illegible] heed the first symptoms, and if you would avoid sudden death, angina pectoris, etc., take Dr. Miles' New Cure before it is too late. Sold at Baker & Hall's drug store.

Jenny Lind Sang Him to Sleep.

D. C. Shears, of Cincinnati, tells an interesting story of Jenny Lind, the Sweedish Nightingale. When he was a child four years old, running about his father's hotel at Niagara Falls, the celebrated singer spent a summer there. She became very much attached to the chubby little fellow, and would not allow his nurse to do anything for him. "Often," said Mr. Shears, "has she taken me to her room and sung me to sleep with such lullabies as few children ever heard. I still have a silver cup which she gave me, and I prize it very highly. During that memorable visit she offered to adopt me, but my parents couldn't give their consent. She corresponded with my family until a short time before her death, and I have a sister whose name is Jenny Lind Shears."

For the delicate and aged and all in whom the vital current is impoverished and sluggish, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the very best tonic. It restores the wasted tissues, and imparts to the system surprising elasticity and vigor. Price $1. Worth $5 a bottle.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. In explanation of the remedial power of these Pellets over so great a variety of diseases, it may truthfully be said that their action upon the system is universal, none gland or tissue escaping their sanative influence. Sold by druggists, 25 cents a vial. Manufactured at the Chemical Laboratory of WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 REWARD

is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Chronic Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH. Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectorating of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, with no manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, no one so deceptive and dangerous, or less understood by physicians.

By its mild, soothing, and healing properties Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "Cold in the Head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache.

Sold by druggists everywhere, 50 cents.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HAUSNER, the famous musician of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "For years I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In fact, from my coughing and clearing of my throat, I was almost strangled. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months I was a man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RICHMOND, Esq., of Big Springs, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. My nose was hard by breaths, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could relieve me or cure me. Finally, I was induced to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and have used three bottles of it. It is the only medicine for catarrh that has reached my case, and I feel that I am fast gaining health. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

FEE ROBBINS, [illegible] Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

Paine's Celery Compound

CURES Nervous Prostration, Nervous Headache, Neuralgia, Nervous Weakness, Stomach and Liver Diseases, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, and all affections of the Kidneys.

WEAK NERVES

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND is a Nerve Tonic which never fails. Containing Celery And Coca, those wonderful nerve stimulants, it speedily cures all nervous disorders.

RHEUMATISM

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND purifies the blood. It drives out the lactic acid, which causes Rheumatism, and restores the blood-making organs to a healthy condition. It is the true remedy for Rheumatism.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND quickly restores the liver and kidneys to perfect health. This curative power, combined with its nerve tonics, makes it the best remedy for all kidney complaints.

DYSPEPSIA

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND strengthens the stomach, and quiets the nerves of the digestive organs. This is why it cures even the worse cases of Dyspepsia.

CONSTIPATION

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND is not a cathartic. It is a laxative, giving easy and natural action to the bowels. Regularity surely follows its use.

THE SOUTHERN GIRL.

Her dimpled cheeks are pale;
She's a lily of the vale,
Not a rose.
In a muslin or a lawn
She is fairer than the dawn
To her beaux.

Her boots are thin and neat,
It is said.
She amputates her r's,
But her eyes are like the stars
Overhead.

On a balcony at night
With a fleecy cloud of white
Round her hair,
Her grace ah, who could paint,
She would fascinate a saint,
I declare.

'Tis a matter of regret,
She's a bit of a coquet,
Whom I sing.
Off her cricket pitch she goes,
With a half a dozen beaux
On her string.

But let that all pass by,
And her maiden moments fly,
Dew empearled,
When she marries, on my life,
She will make the dearest wife
In the world.

THE ROSE ON MY BALCONY.

Prof. Paul Microbe sat intently gazing at the house across the way, and for once in his life lounged in a perfectly natural position with a relaxed and human look on his face. It would have been plain to the dullest that for once in his life, at any rate, the professor had forgotten all about himself, his stomach, his dyspepsia and malaria tendencies, his theories on bacteria and more than all, the important fact that at precisely fifteen minutes past 6 it was his custom to partake of a pint of new milk scalded and two slices of stale graham bread toasted. The professor was tall, lantern-jawed, slab-sided and sedate. He lived by theory, in fact life itself was a theory to him, he had a theory by which he fed his stomach, a theory by which he pruned his mind and made it sprout only on the north or scientific side, a theory by which he raised his children, and innumerable theories regarding diseases of which he wrote books, talked in a college, lectured in Boston and killed people in an experimental way.

Professor Microbe lived in a city far removed from this gray, sedate Southern town, and his duty was far from here, but what with his theories, his dyspepsia and his skim milk system of starving his stomach, he had pretty nearly experimented himself off into the land from which no experimenter has as yet returned, and had been ordered off South for a complete change of scene, food, air and mode of life.

Said his doctor to him: "For heaven's sake, man, quit fooling with yourself, shake yourself together and live as God Almighty intended you should. You are a monster now—a deformity. Eat plenty, drink plenty, laugh, go to the opera, to the theatre, dance, and, if Mrs. Microbe here will let you, fall in love." "If that is your theory of course, doctor," said that sandy lady, Mrs. Microbe really was, only she seemed to grit in the teeth. The professor had married her in pursuance of a theory, and the result of that marriage had been two or three surly, unruly, ill-mannered cubs, who bid fair to grow to man's estate heartily hating theories and theorists.

And so, to cut a long story short, the Professor came South, leaving behind him everything and everybody which comprised life from his point of view. The savages welcomed him and made much of him, therefore he liked the South. But the hotel did not suit him, as he was constantly uncertain about the newness of his milk and the age of his graham bread, and so, by a stroke from fortune—a merry dame who marked him for a victim and intended to have some fun with him—he found lodgings in a charming old Spanish house in the very heart of the French quarter. It was a room quite too lovely for description by a dusty old professor, however distinguished who lived on theories and oatmeal mush and was full of bacteria. It was a front room in an entresol over a furniture shop, with arched Spanish windows blinking out on a balcony of wrought iron of most exquisite beauty. In a corner of the balcony stood one of those grand old water jars, with peeling sides of yellow, brown, and which was full of earth, for a splendid rose vine that clambered all over the railing and sent its tender, sweet perfume stealing shyly into the room.

There was a faded Axminster carpet on the floor, a carved bed, a dressing stand inlaid with mother-of-pear, cabinets, arm chairs, tete-a-tetes, a pier glass that one could not break with a sledge hammer, faded tapestries at the arched doors, old marble vases in the niches where once some demoiselle had prayed to her shrine Virgin, and in the midst of all this the professor, or, to speak correctly, his belongings, for at the moment the learned member of a dozen scientific societies, the eminent Fellow and Ph. D., was hanging over the balcony watching the house across the way.

Wax tapers burned on the marble table and the steam had ceased rising from the pint of new milk in its fragile bowl, but still he sat watching the house opposite. He saw lights, colors and many persons moving about, chairs scattered any how in a fashion that would have scandalized Mrs. Microbe, or the professor either, in his own house; books, music, flowers, magazines, an open piano, a guitar, a dog all ruffled up in old gold ribbon, a cat jingling a silver bell at her blue neck, and moving about here and there a glorious woman with night-black hair piled on the top of her beautiful head, with bare neck and arms, dainty slippered feet and a laugh that seemed to stir the few remaining bristles on the professor's head as he listened, so sweet and seductive it was. She wore a black and white gown, and once she reached out her long fair arm after red roses crammed in a blue bowl. She gathered up a handful of the flowers and fastened them on her breast, turning her head as she did, so that the unguarded looker-on had a most delicious profile of throat, chin and oval cheek. As the roses fluttered on their new, sweet shrine the professor reached out his hand, letting fall, unknowingly, a new work on bacteria that he ought to have been reading, but was not. His fingers touched the rich blossom of a rose upon the balcony railing; the petals felt soft and cool to his nervous, acute touch; the perfume came up to his nostrils like the sweet breath of a child or a woman, and then his hand closed over the flower, tearing it from the steam and bruising it beyond repair.

Down in the street all was gay and cheerful. Women stood in their shop doors chatting, open carriages rolled by, somebody in the piano shop was playing the quartet from "Rigolette," and between the jalousies of a near house the professor could see a party of men and women playing cards at a round table.

To night the professor was less disposed than usual to be critical or severe, and he leaned over the railing looking at life from a new point of view with such an unmistakably healthy and human curiosity as would have delighted his doctor. A crowd of opera singers came out of the restaurant at the corner, and as the latticed doors swung like pendulums, he had winks of [illegible] ere in white linen jackets, little hillocks of golden bread piled on the counter, little green forests of chicory. And then he looked over the way again. She was at the piano singing, with her beautiful head on one side like a bird's.

Is it necessary to explain that Prof. Microbe followed her to the opera nearly paralyzing Nanette when she met him in the corridor dressed in faultless evening attire and looking so distinguished and every inch a professor?

"Monsieur Microbe, Monsieur! Your new milk will be hot if you do not soon drink it up," called laughing Nanette from the balcony above the entresol and pelted him with a rose.

Prof. Microbe smiled. Not the way he smiled when he evolved a new theory or when he read his scientific papers, or even as he smiled in the stiffly starched bosom of his own family, but a genuine smile that said, "I don't care, Nanette," and he caught the rise and fastened it in his button hole.

The beautiful woman was going to the opera. A carriage was at the door, and she stood before the mirror pulling out the rich puffs of her night-black hair and fastening a red rose behind her ears. Her lovely arms were uplifted, and a song and a laugh came from her red mouth. Some one wrapped a cloak about her, gave her a fan, glasses, gloves, and flowers, and then she was gone.

He looked about the grand old building, crowded with women and here and there the black coat of a man, and he recognized with amazement and relief the familiar faces and bald heads and peculiar bumps of quite a number of learned professors and distinguished M. D.'s. These sat listening to the music of "William Tell," grunting contentedly over the sweetest passages, and at the difficult bars saying broadly and loudly: "Bravo! bravo!" as if grand opera and not bacteria, music, and not metaphysics, was the very best thing in life.

Under the mummy cloths in which the professor had persistently wrapped his soul he was a good deal like other men. There wasn't anything he wouldn't do, nothing he would enjoy, if only he was kept in public countenance by those of his own kind, and the sight of those familiar bumps—for no man in the world who knew of such things could fail to recognize the bumps of our learned men, once he had seen 'em—did more to revolutionize the professor than gallons of pepsine or whatever might be the stuff dyspeptics are made of. He at once and forever flung his theories about midnight suppers to the deuce, as his doctor had ordered, when he heard her say to some favored mortals, "Come home to supper with us after the opera."

And that night after the opera he followed her home, and went again to his balcony to gaze into that free, jolly, joyous dining-room, where no blinds were pulled down and where the people sat about eating chicken salad with oil it and boned turkey and cold breasts of pheasants.

He went into his room finally, and heating up a little tin of water over the gas took his night-cap, a cup of boiling water. What would Mrs. Microbe say to you seen of revelry and cold turkey, to the piano trolling out in the midnight air, to the gay voices, to him listening and watching outside? His thoughts went back to the poor, if stiffly starched bosom of his family in their far-off home; he remembered the sedate order of everything, the rules governing his always tidy home, the regular hours, the days for doing this and that, the absolute correctness of everything and every body. Life went on in a groove, and was narrow but pure and sweet and clean. He had the best of it he knew; over the way was much tinsel and flippancy, and too much laughing and singing. He liked that, too, or he thought he would if he might try it once. It was a little hard that oat meal mush should be so tasteless and chicken salad so full of flavor. What would Mrs. Microbe say to a midnight supper in her leather hung dining-room? By no flight of fancy could he think of her as sweeping her hand around in a genial, general way, and saying to all who might be present, "Come home to supper, all of you. We will find something to eat, I know."

Prof. Microbe wrapped his dressing gown around him and crept out upon the balcony. How jolly they were across the way, singing "William Tell." After all, did his theories and his oat meal mush diet, and his laws of abstinence do him any more good than "William Tell" and boned turkey? Live as God Almighty intended you should. Eat and drink and enjoy this beautiful world. It is a good world, be good and happy in it. God hates a sordid heart.

The professor reached out to Nanette's lovely rose vine, he plucked off every royal sweet blossom and, like a boy throwing snowballs, he flung them across the way upon the balcony. And the next day, in writing up items for the paper, I made the following: "Prof. Paul Microbe, the distinguished scientist, who has been spending some time in the city, returned home this morning, finding that the climate of the South did not agree with him."

THE HOTEL THIEF.

The Latest Method of Working the Guests' Rooms.

The hotel sneak thief has cudgeled his brain and evolved a new scheme for pushing his trade. It is worked through a female pal, and, while it has been comparatively successful in New York, is not likely to enjoy a long life. The shrewd clerk is beginning to see through the game. Here's an illustration of how it failed in a prominent hotel below Union Square:

"Give me the key to 172," said the bell boy, who was in a hurry.

The clerk took down the key and was about to hand it over when he suddenly bethought himself and looked in the box corresponding to the key. Then he asked who wanted it.

"Lady in the parlor, and says she's in a hurry."

"That's not her room. Go ask her name."

A few minutes afterward Front returned.

"She says it don't make no difference, and it was a mistake, and she's gone."

"That's what I thought," muttered the clerk with a knowing wink.

It the woman had secured the key—and she depended largely for success upon the chance that the clerk was very busy just at that time—she would have gone through the room in a hurry and trusted to the proverbial thieves' luck to get away before the rightful occupant returned. In that event, of course, the loss would have fallen upon the hotel.

HE CAUGHT A SUCKER.

The Experience of a Man Who Fortified His Pocket.

"Bill Charters," said a man in a Main street store to a Stockton (Cal.) reporter, "was fond of fishing. On winter evenings at home, if he had nothing better to [illegible] and inspect it thoroughly, and then, after making two or three new-fangled fly hooks, he'd place the outfit back in its box, at the same time knowing that he'd be unable to use his tackle for probably six months.

"Bill lived in Boston when I first knew him. That was eighteen or twenty years ago. He was a tinsmith by trade. I went up one night to see him concerning some work he had been engaged on for several days. Bill was in the dining-room examining his fishing tackle when I entered.

"One huge batch of hooks attracted my attention. There were probably thirty very small eyehooks, all sewed securely to a jagged piece of cloth string drilling—about the size of your hand.

"'Bill,' said I, taking the hook covered cloth in my hand, 'did you ever catch any fish with this arrangement?'

"'Yes, sir,' he answered with a laugh, 'I caught a sucker on that collection last fall that weighed 160 pounds.

"'Where and how,' I asked, hardly knowing what Bill meant, as I had never seen a sucker that weighed more than three or four pounds.

"'Just this way,' replied Bill. 'One night my wife and I decided to go to the theater. When we reached the box-office there was a perfect jam of people. I left my wife near the door while I struggled bravely to reach the ticket window. I asked for two dress-circle tickets, and when I put my hand in my pocket to get the money to pay for them I discovered that my pocket-book was gone. "Stolen!" exclaimed I, and retreated.

"'Mrs. Charters and I walked home. She felt disappointed; she wanted to see that play. A thought struck me instantly, and just as quickly as possible I put my plan into execution. Turning my money pocket inside out I hastily sewed all the small fishhooks I had to the inside of that pocket in such a manner that when my pocket was shoved back to its proper position the barbs of the hooks stood out and pointed downward.

"'I took some more money with me—but I placed it in another pocket—and again we started to the theater. There was still considerable of a crowd in the neighborhood of the box office, and once more I began to edge my way through for the purpose of procuring tickets. I allowed my fishhook pocket to take care of itself.

"'Just as I was being handed my ticket I felt a bite. I attempted to turn round, when I found I had hooked a very fine-looking sucker in the shape of a very well dressed man who wore a very shiny tile. I paid no attention to his struggling at my pocket, as I knew after one or two tugs he'd quit. When I reached my wife she said: 'William, who is this gentleman with you?' I told her he was a very particular friend of mine.

"'An officer standing at the door accompanied me, at my request, into an adjoining room, where I explained matters. I recovered my lost pocket-book and greenbacks. It was keeping company with seven other similarly situated purses. I had to cut the pocket out to hand the thief over to the officer, but it was returned to me after the doctor succeeded in getting the hooks out of the fellow's hand.

"'Yes,' concluded Bill, 'he was the biggest sucker I ever caught—must have weighed at least 160 pounds. And this is no fish story, either.'"

Shall Women be Allowed to Vote?

The question of female suffrage has agitated the tongues and pens of reformers for many years, and good arguments have been adduced for and against it. Many of the so-called sex could vote intelligently, and many would vote as their husbands did, and give no thought to the merits of a political issue. They would all vote for Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, for they know it is a boon to their sex. It is unequaled for the cure of leucorrhea, abnormal discharges, morning sickness, and the countless ills to which women are subject. It is the only remedy for women's peculiar weakness and ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money refunded. A Debtor Dunned in Church.

There was a scene during services in the Jewish synagog, on Wylie avenue, near Tunnel street, Pittsburg, recently, when Ben Marks, a dealer in clothing, entered, seated himself in the pew of Mr. Friedman, and began making noisy demands for the payment of a small bill which the latter owes him. Marks became so demonstrative that the services were suspended and several ushers conducted him out of the building. Later in the day Friedman visited Ald. O'Donnell's office and entered suit against Marks for disturbing an assemblage engaged in public worship. A warrant was issued for Marks, who entered bail for a hearing for Friday morning. A large number of the members of the congregation were subpoenaed for witnesses. Ald. O'Donnell stated that in his nineteen years' experience as an alderman this is the first case of this kind he has received.

I have had nasal catarrh for ten years so bad that there were great sores in my nose, and one place was eaten through. I got Ely's Cream Balm. Two bottles did the work. My nose and head are well. I feel like another man. C. S. McMillen, Sibley, Jackson Co., Mo.

For all forms of nasal catarrh where there is dryness of the air passage with what is commonly called "stuffing up," especially when going to bed Ely's Cream Balm gives immediate relief. Its benefit to me has been priceless.—A. G. Case, M. D., Millwood, Kas.

MY UNCLE'S WILL.

I had always been led to expect that I would inherit my uncle's money. My parents were poor, and I am inclined to think that they looked forward with unnecessary eagerness to the time when I should be able to bring them out of their poverty.

I little knew the condition of the will, which ran as follows: Unless I married my cousin Claude before I was 18 all the fortune was to be distributed among certain hospitals, and we were none of us to get a cent. I first heard this from my cousin's own lips. He was surprised that I had not heard it before, but he spoke very kindly on the subject, and did not try to urge me very hard to accept him. He was almost old enough to be my father, but was fine looking and a man of intelligence.

When he had told me everything he said: "Dispassionately, I should say that your happiest course lay in accepting me, because you insure large worldly prosperity to yourself and to those you are bound in duty to consider, because you place yourself in your own proper sphere and station—because I know myself to be an honorable man—well fitted for the responsibilities your decision would devolve upon me. On the other hand, I see a taint of selfishness in my words. Your young beauty tempts me; the fortune you secure to me tempts me; and I question myself whether I have a moral right to seek to bind your youth to my declining years, though without you they must be passed in comparative poverty, no small sacrifice to one who has known only luxury! Only since I have seen you have I learned to feel all the embarrassments growing out of our uncle's strange will."

He paused, and I, who had been revolving in silence all he had said, answered calmly. "I am to accept you, then, before my 18th birthday or all this wealth goes to swell the coffers of various hospitals and colleges; my parents are still poor, condemned to this dreary life; you are impoverished, and I am forever shut out from all hope of higher earthly existence. It is so?"

He bowed his head.

"I see papa coming," I said. "I will go to him; and to morrow morning I will inform you of my decision."

He kissed the hand I extended to him; then drawing it within his arm he led me to my father.

I shut myself in my room that day and spoke to no one. I knew now how my parents had always regarded me—less as a child than as the instrument of their release from poverty.

They must be freed—I saw that clearly—but perhaps I need not be married at once. I decided the question quickly enough that I would accept my cousin. Had I possessed but a little more experience I should have known that my reluctance to a ratification of my vows arose from a doubt whether I could love the husband I felt compelled to accept.

The next day the old house was filled with smiling faces—no gloom sat on any but my own, and I kept my sadness for the solitude of my own room. A week later, the day following my birthday, Claude went away. In another month my parents and myself left the old house forever.

We took up our abode in the splendid London mansion where my uncle had lived his lonely, useless life. Here we were soon surrounded by the elite of society. I had young companions of my own sex in plenty; but I found them shallow and frivolous. I had lived in thought, they in the externals of a giddy existence. I liked the young men no better. Claude grew daily in my esteem and affection. I became reconciled to a lot that would secure me so kind and constant a friend. I learned to lean upon and trust him. He was counsellor, guide, friend, as well as lover.

We were married, and were happy—a brief, bright happiness. The month we had allotted to travel was not passed when I brought home his mangled remains—crushed out of all human semblance by that dreadful railroad collision which shocked the country that year, and I entered the home he had prepared for his bride clad in the garments of widowhood.

I remained in my solitude for some years—years that I devoted to improvements of my mind. I was 22 when I again re-entered society. I was still young and not unattractive, and I was rich. I need not have remained a widow long, but I was in no haste to marry, above all, I meant, if ever I resigned my liberty, it should be into the hands of one whom Claude might have appointed.

At last I found such a one, or he found me. More truly, I suppose, a mutual and inexplicable attraction drew our spheres into contact. We knew not of each other's existence, as we knew things here, until we met, but our souls were no strangers, even in that hour. They mingled then into one—a bond of sweet unison was formed, of which marriage was but the external symbol, and in perfect accord all the years of our life have since been passed.

Claude would have loved this man, and often I think that he looks upon us from that other life to which he has gone, and smiles upon a union that is so fraught with happiness.

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Blippus, Ind. testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hate, druggist, Bellville, Ohio affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at

D. A. RANSOM'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Prices 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Republicans of Lenawee County met in convention last Monday, to choose delegates for the State and Congressional conventions. Capt. B. F. Graves was made chairman and Oliver H. Holt, of Riga secretary. After the appointment of the usual committees, a recess was taken until after noon.

Upon reassembling after dinner the business was quickly dispatched. Lenawee county was entitled to 23 delegates, and it was decided to select two from the County at large and seven from each of the three representative districts.

Hon. John K. Boies was chosen as one of the delegates at large to the state convention, and Hon. W. S. Wilcox chosen as the second, both by acclamation.

B. F. Graves was chosen one of the delegates at large to the congressional convention, and Grant Fellows, of Hudson, the other, both by acclamation.

The convention then divided into district caucuses, and on reassembling reported the following list of delegates.

FIRST DISTRICT—State—F. W. Samsen, H. C. Conklin, F. C. Rector, T. H. Temple, Chas. L. Bidwell, M. T. Cole, Harvey Sheldon.

Congressional—Joel Carpenter, G. R. Corbrane, S. W. Bordine, S. F. Marsteller, J. R. Cairns, R. A. Nelson, Cyrus Mead.

SECOND DISTRICT—State—Alanson Beebe, L. A. W. Smith, T. S. Appleyard, R. Bennett, Chas. Davis, J. S. Ryan, W. S. [illegible]

Congressional—[illegible] R. M. [illegible], Ed. L. Webb, F. F. Anderson, S. Wilson, Jay Hose, J. N. Doran, [illegible]

THIRD DISTRICT—State—[illegible] W. Tasker, R. B. F. Norris, C. A. Nelson, John Kelly, A. O. Abbey, H. L. Rayland, H. [illegible]

Congressional—[illegible] Jas. Sawyer, John Morris, Chas. Brown, R. A. Beach, L. N. Chase.

The nominations were unanimously made.

TO THE CONVENTION.

Delegates to both conventions were given the power of personal substitution. Previous to the meeting of the conventions, but when the convention met, if there were any vacancies the delegation was given power to fill them.

The county committee was then chosen as follows:

Adrian city, First ward—B. F. Graves.

Second ward—Darius Roberts.

Third ward—E. S. Angell.

Fourth ward—H. F. [illegible]

Adrian—M. L. Robertson.

Blissfield—D. Templeton.

Cambridge—S. Morey.

Clinton—H. M. Ramsdage.

Deerfield—E. E. Bourne.

Dover—M. H. Lawrence.

Fairfield—[illegible]

Franklin—[illegible]

Hudson—[illegible]

Macon—[illegible]

Madison—[illegible]

Ridgeway—[illegible]

Rollin—[illegible]

Raisin—[illegible]

Tecumseh—[illegible]

Seneca—[illegible]

Tipton—[illegible]

Weston—[illegible]

Woodstock—[illegible]

The resolutions adopted by the convention, instructed its delegates to use their utmost loyal and honorable endeavor to secure for that sterling representative of Lenawee republicanism, Hon. John K. Boies, the position of delegate-at-large to the national convention, believing that he nobly merits this great honor, and that should he be chosen he will well acquit himself of its manifold responsibilities.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., APR. 26, 1888

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Al. Heidenreich is in town.

Where is Tecumseh's base ball club? Where is it?

The Bi. Club dance is likely to be well patronized.

DeGarmo Grandy, of Detroit, was in town this week.

A fresh coat of paint adorns the front of John J. Orr's drug store.

The girls who dance are being rapidly snapped up for the May party.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Fowler, of Ann Arbor, are visiting their daughter in the village.

Two C. J. & M. trains came within a half car length of colliding last Sunday evening.

Mrs. C. M. Burlingame, of Coldwater, is visiting her old Tecumseh friends this week.

Jim Curry and family started for Grand Rapids yesterday where they expect to remain.

Milburn Keyser went to Detroit Tuesday to begin a Commercial course in a business college.

Miss Florence Cook, of Brooklyn, is expected to sing at the Opera House next Tuesday evening.

A. L. Brewer has been fitting his residence with inside blinds and otherwise improving the interior.

Mat Blosser and Arthur G. Case, of Manchester, were in town Tuesday and favored the HERALD with a call.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Trann, of St. Louis, are guests this week of her parents, Geo. Heesen's family and other friends.

Mrs. C. A. Ham returned last Friday from Chatham, N. Y. where she has been spending a few weeks past with her friends there.

Mrs. Watson Aten, who has been confined to the house a long time with inflammatory rheumatism was able to ride out last Sunday.

Lucius Lilley paid a visit to Cleveland Ohio, last week, and found the old weather several notches colder than at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Steinhoff, formerly of Canada, returned to Tecumseh last Thursday and will make their home at her old residence, corner Pearl and Pottawatamie streets.

Mrs. Kate Cleveland, a reliable clairvoyant medium, of Detroit, will give sittings at the residence of Giles Cleveland, corner of Maumee and Shawnee streets, Monday and Tuesday, April 30th and May 1st, two days only.

W. T. Eccles has relinquished his position as pressman in the HERALD office and is now a fully fledged printer and be prepared to do the job work that may come to the village. Give the lad a trial when you have a job of printing to do and you will find him a good workman.

Work has been started on the new road leading from James Avery's farm west to E. V. Horton's a distance of one mile. This is the road the interested parties living on that section have been trying for years to secure, and when finished will be of great benefit to the entire community.

Miss E. Cora Depuy has a poem in "Fame and Fortune" of March 24, entitled "Isolation." Miss Depuy's poem was selected out of forty-eight thousand manuscripts of all kinds and descriptions and given the place of honor in the first issue of the new magazine. Fame and Fortune is a new weekly, and is published in New York.

[illegible]

[illegible] Miss Charlotte Adams, [illegible] of the Magazine of Art, has just returned from the South, which she visited to report upon its art conditions for the benefit of the Magazine's readers. Miss Adams thinks that the art soil is particularly rich in that section of the country, and that it will show results before long which will astonish the public as much as has its accomplishment in literature.

Harper's Magazine for May is another proof of the determination of its conductors that in all respects it shall lead the other monthlies. One after one the names of the principal magazine writers of to-day greet the eye as the pages are slowly turned over, and their literary efforts are supplemented by the best artistic work of artist and engraver. Neither in variety nor excellence will this number be easily surpassed. The frontispiece is a portrait of Kinglake, the historian, and is of especial interest now that his work of thirty years, "The Invasion of the Crimea," has just been finished.

A. J. Sherrard, of New York, was in town over Sunday.

Al. Brown is delivering again for McClure's grocery store.

Rev. C. S. Lester, of Benton Harbor occupied the Baptist pulpit last Sunday.

Two houses for sale, one to rent, and rooms to rent. Enquire of A. James.

Mr. Hitchu, who has been on the sick list for the past few days, is now on the gain.

Miss Minnie Neeley, of Brooklyn, is the guest of Mrs. Chas. Albaugh for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Roof, of South Bend, Ind., are visiting their daughter Mrs. Wm. C. Heck.

Will Spaulding is afflicted with a serious attack of illness, and his friends are somewhat alarmed about him.

The suit of Griffith vs. Rowland to secure back wages is in progress today at Justice Burridge's office.

To old and young
Both large and small—
Let's patronize
The Bi. Club ball.

James Ingersoll has left with us the largest egg of the season. It measures 8x6½ inches. How is that for high?

Chas. Thompson, of Elkhart, was in town over Sunday. He says the Kies Bros. are flourishing in their business there.

Mrs. Col. Saviers and her daughter Alice, of St. Louis, Mich., have been visiting Tecumseh friends the past week.

If you have not already done so, engage your girl at once for the Bi. Club party. It will soon be everlastingly too late.

Cadet Will McNair is making a fine record at West Point. He stands with the first half of his class in his studies and number one in discipline.

Mrs. O. B. Fish and committee will entertain the ladies' social at the Baptist parlors next Thursday afternoon, May 3d. A large attendance is desired.

State papers please copy. Is getting to be a good deal of a chestnut. The request will be granted in this office hereafter when accompanied with the cash.

B. L. Baxter was at home over Sunday. He is in Deerfield the week attending to his business interests there and will return to Battle Creek next week.

The invitations for the Bi. Club party, which were issued from the HERALD job rooms, have received many compliments. They are neat and original.

We have turned out a very nice lot of engraving lately. The Freeborn work is giving good satisfaction, and this department is fully up to our expectations thus far.

President Hewson objects to having the village ordinances published during the heat of "Chronic Jerusalem." To obviate this apparent ingratitude, we publish the ordinances this week.

The Temple Builders of the Baptist Church will serve a "Yellow Break-fast" in the parlors, Thursday morning, from 6 o'clock a.m. to 10 a.m. Breakfast 10 cents. Everybody come.

The Hotel Clark of Norvell, was destroyed by fire last night. The fire was the most exciting ground about Hillsdale last night. He was the guest of Prof. Lee, of Britain, 11 miles Rogaway 2 years ago and thinks his last visit street. He hardly knows the town.

A. W. Hardy who has lately taken charge of the New National hotel at Bond's has refurnished the same throughout and is now prepared to accommodate the travelling public. When you come to Bond's have Hardy call.

[illegible]

[illegible] Sunday morning, at 10:30, April 29, at the Unitarian church. Text [illegible] in the evening a sermon on "Uneventful Lives." All cordially invited to attend these services. Sunday school at 11 ?

The April term of the Circuit Court commenced last Tuesday. The Calendar contains 5 criminal cases; 40 issues of fact, trial by jury; 7 issues of fact, trial by Court; 2 issues of law; 1 imparlance case; 2 chancery cases, first class; and 12 chancery cases, fourth class.

And now an Adrian youth, with a pompadour hair cut, has gone and done the giddiest thing of the season—bleached his hair. Around the crown of the head, where the hat covers the cranium, the locklets are the color of the virgin gold, but beneath, where the vulgar and impertinent sunshine has had a show the compound is not so effective, and the hair retains its customary color. Verily, the time seems to be coming when the dude will wear bustles and bangles, beside corsets and bleached ringlets.—Adrian Times.

Jas. Freeman, of Belleville, is in town.

Mrs. N. R. Brown went to Detroit yesterday.

Miss Fannie Cone, of Hudson, was visiting friends in town yesterday.

Mr G. D. Ellis has taken Robt. Lowery's place in James Lowery's grocery store.

The Central telephone station is now in the new office at Marks & Russell's drug store.

Chas. Eldridge starts this afternoon for Baltimore, Md., to enjoy a visit of two weeks with his father.

A large number of Tecumseh ladies are attending the foreign missionary convention in Detroit this week.

Harry Root is now the father of a baby boy, his wife having presented him with one last Friday morning.

Anderson & Co. have a change of card in to-day's paper. They are opening new goods every day now.

Remember the Prohibition meeting at K. of L. Hall, Saturday evening April 28th. Let there be a good turnout.

The popularity of the "People's Cyclopedia" is shown by its rapid sale. Nearly 100,000 sets since its first publication seven years ago.

Dr. H. L. Stewart has began extensive repairs on his residence. The house will be raised to two full stories and rebuilt throughout.

It will be "Britton" hereafter instead of "Balch," the name of the postoffice we mean. Now let "Tipton" be changed to "Franklin."

Tecumseh needs three things this summer.—A good Business Men's Association, a good base ball club, a good daily newspaper. The first is an assured fact. Shall we have the other two?

Mrs. Phillip Totten, of Petoskey formerly and for many years a resident of this city, is visiting her aged mother, Mrs. C. Woodard and other relatives and friends. The old lady is in her usual good health and enjoys the visit.

Bert Farrah, of Raisin, who is teaching in the public schools of Michiganville, reports having enjoyed six months sleighing this last winter and that they have 3½ feet of the beautiful here yet. It must be they have one winter term of school and a vacation late in the fall.

A number of graceless young men and boys have been in the habit of congregating on Sunday, at Palmyra, for the purpose of playing base ball, much to the scandal of the better element of the people. The two Palmyra churches have decided on united action to put a stop to this Sabbath desecration, and if the practice is not stopped arrests will be next in order. This is a word of warning that should be heeded.

Why should not Tecumseh have a good base ball team this season? We have good timber, and there are some for a first class amateur team. Clinton, Hudson and other towns are awake and why should not Tecumseh wake up also? We do not need high priced players. A little work, a small expenditure of money, good management and a judicious selection of players will set up a home team that can play winning ball, furnish good entertainments, and help us all in some ways than one.

Cozzens' Jerusalem "Show" on Monday evening was somewhat hindered in the way of entertainments and was a decided bust. About forty little "gaggsters," boys and girls, were treated to a lot of the singing in the time honored style of Mrs. Edwards and daughter, of Detroit. The little folks were now in their glory and enjoyed their parts admirably. [illegible]

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

Adrian has organized a new brass band.

[illegible] so late in April?

The G. A. R. Post of Morenci is organizing a drum corps.

A Union Veteran's Union has lately been started in Hudson.

Hudson is about organizing a business men's association.

The C. J. & M. road now have a night operator at Hudson.

The Britton postmaster is likely fixed in his new quarters.

An evening school for teaching German has been started at Manchester.

How many saloons will there be in this town after next Tuesday? How many?

Over 100 acres of cabbage will be planted in the vicinity of Blissfield this season.

Over seventy instruments are now connected with the Commercial telegraph line.

The Odd Fellow's Lodge of Hudson, celebrate anniversary day by the dedication of their new hall.

The colored Republicans of the county held a convention at Adrian a few days ago for the purpose of electing delegates to the State convention to be held at Jackson on the 24th.

To-day, April 26th, is the anniversary of the establishment of Odd Fellowship in this country. The event will be very generally celebrated throughout the country. A very imposing demonstration will be given in Detroit.

Mrs. Russell, of Hudson, is canvassing that burg with a sort of history of the bible, but inasmuch as very few Hudson men ever read the bible, except when very young, they take no interest in it, and she finds the sale monstrous in its dullness.—Adrian Press.

We have just completed the printing, in pamphlet form, of the genealogy of the Perkins family, compiled by Newman Perkins, M. D., of Clayton. The total number of descendants, including husbands and wives, is 826. It is an unusually complete family history, and the compilation required much work and painstaking.—Hudson Post.

Editor Stearns has had his ear to the ground. In the last issue of his paper he says that the Democrats of Rollin will have to wake up, pull off their coats, roll up their sleeves and work fourteen hours in the day hereafter. And why? Because the "pesky" prohibitionists actually polled more votes at the recent election in that township than the Democrats.—Clayton Journal.

[illegible] ladies discussed the question of a street car line last week. Did they [illegible] nerve? Not a bit. They seized a lad, dragged him to the pump, [illegible] and had the [illegible] order, and before any [illegible] knew there was any danger.—Adrian Press.

The inside sidewalks are being sidewalked by [illegible] subscription, and the subscriptions not real [illegible] of the Courier can do better than to lay down his pronounced [illegible] and copy them word for word.—Evening News.

The truth is seldom said and must prevail. The News could not [illegible] out in its orange policy, however, as it is for it will be in danger of being peddled first time we [illegible] Adrian Courier.

On Tuesday the 8 [illegible] Circuit Court [illegible] granted a [illegible] to the case of Chas. E. Kee[illegible] the city of [illegible] compel the [illegible] [illegible] Justice McGahan to recover his money. The case was postponed several times, but Tuesday morning the lawyers got ready for the tussle and the trial began with a jury of six. All the merits and demerits of the ditch laws, and supreme court decisions were gone over from A to Z. All day Tuesday and Wednesday and until two o'clock Thursday morning the attorneys wrangled and fought and pleaded, and at that time left it with the jury to decide, which they did about four o'clock, bringing in a judgment for Mr. Crockett for $71.70, the amount of tax paid. Messrs. Lamb & Pratt and J. L. Glover appeared for Mr. Crockett and Watts & Smith for the township of Ogden. The town board holds a meeting Saturday, when it will be decided whether to appeal the case or not.—Blissfield Advance.

TECUMSEH BUSINESS MENS' ASSOCIATION.

The above is the title of the organization effected last evening. The association [illegible] was called to order by Pres. O. P. Bills, who read the constitution and by-laws as presented by the committee. They were in substance the same as those of the state society, and were adopted. Eighteen of those present then signed the constitution and by-laws, paid the initiation fee and became charter members. The regular meetings will be held on the second Wednesday of each month and the annual meeting the second Wednesday in January.

George Heesen read a communication from a large manufactory, stating that they would move from their present location to this state or Kansas. They would require a stock company to be organized here with a capital of $20,000. Their plant and stock is worth about $15,000, and they would employ from 75 to 100 hands.

The communication was referred to the committee on manufacturing.

Pres. Bills also read a letter from another thriving concern, which intends to move from its present location; their present buildings were old and timber was getting scarce in that vicinity. They now employ 35 hands, which they claim they can increase to 75 with improved facilities for doing work. No offer was made.

The communication was referred to the committee on manufacturing, after which adjourned to the meeting the second Wednesday in May.

GOD'S APPOINTMENTS.

Two men went forth, one summer hour,
And both were young, and brave, and true;
Two loyal hearts, two brains of power,
Eager to dare and do.

Each followed right, each turned from wrong,
And sought with hope and courage strong
The best life has to give.

For one love's fountain yielded up
Its sweetest—royally he quaffed;
The other drank a brimming cup,
A bitter, bitter draught.

One touched but stones, they turned to gold,
Wealth came and stood at his command;
The other's silver turned to mold
And dust within his hand.

The world crowned one with leaves of bay,
He ate with kings, their honors shared;
The other trod a barren way,
And few men knew or cared.

And this is life, two sow, one reaps;
Two run abreast, one gains the goal;
One laughs aloud, the other weeps
In anguish of his soul.

One seems of fate the hopeless toy,
Unbroken one's triumphant chain;
God hath appointed one to joy,
Appointed one to pain.

The wisdom that doth rule the world
Is wisdom far beyond our ken;
But when all seems to ruin hurried,
God's hand is mighty then.

In God's appointment, I believe,
Trusting His love, believe in this;
That though from day to day men grieve,
And life's sweet fruitage miss,

In some glad future they shall know
Why one through striving may not win;
The Book of Life will surely show
Why all these things have been.

SAVED BY "CORONATION."

A True Story.

It was—I do not remember the precise year—but it was when I was about 17 years old and was living in the New England village where I was born and from which I had hardly ever been away. It was a pleasant old town, built in colonial days, and which contained few inhabitants who were not descended from the early puritan settlers. It was situated, as most New England towns are, among the hills, and was on the eastern side of a lake some two miles long and about a mile wide. That lake—or pond, as we called it—furnished most of the pleasure for the people in the village. There we swam, fished, and boated in the summer, and when the cold of winter had made solid the surface of its pure water, there we skated till the fall of the snow came snow. On the east side there was a succession of green fields and orchards, while most of the western shore was lined by a primeval forest of pine trees. Only one clearing had been made among those old cone-bearing trees, and that was a recent one and embraced but a few acres. The great trunks of the trees had been hauled to a ship building town on the Kennebec for spars for vessels, while the branches had been piled in heaps among the huge rocks that occupied most of the ground.

It was the day before Thanksgiving, the only holiday that New England knows much about, and about which the rest of the world knows so very little. For three nights the cold had been very severe for the time of the year, and the newly formed ice was as smooth and clear as a looking-glass. The Portland stage and the extra carriages that accompanied it had brought in most of the persons who were expected to join in the family reunion. Brave boys came from the stores of Boston and the saw mills of Oldtown. Brave girls, beautiful in the devotion they showed to the families they were supporting at home, came from the cotton mills at Lowell and Manchester. Houses where plain food had been served for many a week, were now stocked with luxuries, for to-morrow was Thanksgiving, "the gladdest, merriest day" of all the year.

What were we to do on that day besides go to church and eat the feast that had been so long in preparation? Such was the question asked by my strong, earnest, older friend, who had come down from Boston to spend Thanksgiving. "Skate, of course," I answered. "But why not try the ice to-night?" he asked. I could give no reason, and so we went down to the shore of the pond, fastened on our skates, and flew, as it were, over the glassy surface to the cove, where the pile of resinous boughs stood. Once there, we conceived the idea of skating back to the village, collecting the young men and women, boys and girls, taking suitable provisions for a picnic, placing them all in sleighs and on sleds, drawing them over to this place, and eating a supper on the rocks amid the glare of the burning tree tops.

We were not long in carrying out our plans, for almost every house had its sleigh and skaters, and the persons who were destitute of either were taken care of by their neighbors. In an hour the little lake was in possession of the merriest skating party it had ever known. And then the sport, the laughs, the songs, and the merry talking. Even now I shud[illegible] at the thought of such boisterous sport with impending death so very near. The sport was over enough) the apples and mince pies taken the edge off hunger, the songs among the pines, the great fires among the resinous pine peoples were now smouldering among the larger stones, or singing in the stumps and roots. It was nearly time to go, and the company was arranging itself in little groups as I last saw it when it came over the ridge of the hills and sleds together, my young friend stood by my side upon a rock and gazed at the lingering flames. The order from the leader was soon obeyed. The little vehicles were arranged from ten to twenty feet apart, according to the length of the ropes and leading lines that we had, and three of four skaters were stationed between them. Then two much long ropes were stretched on either side, of which some twenty skaters took hold. With a shout and a whoop, such as Indians give when rushing into battle, we started on the run. The line, first straight, or wavering where the poorest skaters were, soon took the form of a crescent, and with a clamor of voices and the grating of the skates we proceeded right joyfully.

My strong friend and I were on the outer side, and held the place nearest the [illegible]. We had not proceeded far before I perceived that the ice was bending in front of us, and I could clearly hear the crack amid the noise of the skaters. I did not speak a word, but looked intently into my companion's face. I only thought that so long as we kept in motion as we were go[illegible] long we might pass the terri[illegible] but I well knew that if the [illegible] fears became known a panic [illegible] the line, some skaters [illegible], and the sleighs and their precious freights must sink to the bottom.

I can never forget the horror of that moment—a moment that seemed an age. I was faint myself, but I shuddered lest some skater should fall or learn the situation. I could not speak for fear, but I most feared that other voices would stop and that the cracking of the ice should be heard by the women, who would be sure to scream. My eyes were fixed on my companion's face. I was fairly drawn along over the quivering ice that seemed to rise higher before us every moment. Cold sweat was on my forehead, but I could not loosen my hand from the rope to wipe it off. My friend noticed that I was lagging—I, who was so expert a skater. His eye caught mine, and by that sort of intuitive knowledge we are sometimes endowed with in times of great danger, he became aware of our dreadful situation, heard the cracking of the ice, saw it, felt it rising in front of us.

What did the strong man do? Flee like a coward from the dangers he had brought us to, and escape to the land? Did the alarm seize him that had overpowered me? Far otherwise. Raising his voice so it could be heard over the din of the skaters and the merry voices of those in the sleigh, he shouted: "Sing Coronation; all sing, so we can time our strokes," and without lowering his voice, he sang

All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all.

The order came so unexpectedly that few joined in singing this verse, but when it came to the next stanza almost all the voices were heard. I felt a sort of relief when the soprano, alto, tenor, and bass voices all struck the words

Crown Him ye martyrs of our God,
Who from His Altars call.

But I feared the time when the bass would be left to carry the line alone. There were but three or four bass voices in the entire company, but my friend was numbered among them. I noticed that he husbanded his breath for this, as a strong man saves his strength for some great effort. Nevertheless, I could hear alternating with the words

Extol the stem of Jesse's rod

the crack—crack—crack—crack—crack of the brittle shell that was between us and eternity. It was a wondrous relief when four parts instead of one, and a hundred voices instead of four, took on the words, which sounded like an anthem of praise:

Extol the stem of Jesse's rod,
And crown Him Lord of all.

We were now approaching the middle of the lake, where the water was the deepest; so deep, indeed, that no line in the village could reach the bottom, and where the ice must be the thinnest because it was the last to freeze there. I knew this, but I felt we were going with such rapidity there would be no new danger so long as there would be no break in the singing. I singled out a tree on the shore, we were trying to make, and calculated if, at the rate we were then singing, there were verses enough to last until we reached it. I feared lest the leader might omit a stanza, as was sometimes done in church, and there might be a space over which we would be left to pass in silence, but the cracking of the ice.

I had no cause for alarm, however, in the matter. There was, indeed, that dreadful crack—crack—crack—crack of the ice distinctly heard during the singing of one line in each stanza of the hymn, but it was either that I had become more accustomed to it, or because it was more faint than a little time before that it failed to affect me as at first. So, too, there was a little breadth of ice to be passed over after the singers had closed the verse:

Let every kindred, every tribe
On this terrestrial ball,
To Him all majesty ascribe,
And crown Him Lord of all.

But our momentum was then such that I knew we should reach the shore in safety, which we soon did. On reaching the shore there was the same boisterous noise that marked our starting, each one untying his sled or sleigh and joining the little party with which he came. But of the peril through which they had passed, the danger from which they had been rescued, no one of them had the slightest intimation. The two who knew all remained on the sandy beach after the party had gone to their homes. Their arms were about each other's necks as they knelt, and a tremor closed the lips that would have prayed. The next day was Thanksgiving. Singularly enough, the opening hymn in the church service was the one that was sung on the ice, but it was not strange that two hands holding hymn books trembled when all the congregation sang "Coronation."

Greatly Excited.

Not a few of the citizens of Tecumseh have recently become greatly excited over the astounding facts, that several of their friends who had been pronounced by their physicians as incurable and beyond all hope—suffering with dreaded monster Consumption—have been completely cured by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, the only remedy that does positively cure all throat and lung diseases, Coughs, Colds, asthma and Bronchitis.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, on the 11th day of October, 1883, Samuel W. Temple mortgaged to Addison Hardenburg, all that parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, in the county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point in the east line of Pearl street ten (10) rods north of the north line of Shawnee street, running thence north from said North line of Shawnee street about ten (10) rods to the Railway Depot Grounds; thence northward on west line of said Depot Grounds about six (6) rods to lands of Heesen Brothers and Nyland, or at least occupied by them as a Box Ringer Factory; thence west on south line of said land of Heesen Brothers and Nyland two (2) rods more or less to land conveyed by said Samuel W. Temple and wife, Hettie A. to Edwin Wood; thence south on east line of said land so as aforesaid conveyed to said Wood two and one-half (2½) rods to the southeast corner thereof; thence west on south line of said parcel of land so as aforesaid conveyed to said Wood, eight (8) rods to the east line of Pearl street aforesaid; thence south on east line of Pearl street to place of beginning, with all the appurtenances thereto belonging or in anywise appertaining or thereupon situated, including the machinery in and about the buildings thereon or to be hereafter annexed to the same or any part thereof, to secure the payment of $258.00 in five years from the date thereof with interest to be paid annually at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, the first three years, and for the remaining two years interest to be paid annually at the rate of nine per cent. per annum, which mortgage was on the 11th day of October, 1883, duly recorded in office of Register of Deeds for said county of Lenawee in Liber 93 of mortgages on page 339 and 340. And whereas said mortgage contains a provision that in event any default shall be made in the payment of said interest, or any part thereof at the time therein specified, and shall remain in arrears for the space of sixty days the aforesaid principal sum with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of said mortgagee, his executors, administrators and assigns, become due and payable. And whereas default has been made in the payment of interest on said mortgage to the amount of $10.67-100 and upwards and the same having remained unpaid and in arrears for a space of more than sixty days, and the undersigned, administratrix, hereby elects to declare and does hereby declare the whole amount due, both principal and interest, amounting at the date of this notice to the sum of $1180.82 100, and no proceedings having been commenced at law or in equity for the recovery of said sum or any part thereof. And whereas the undersigned administratrix has been compelled to pay the further sum of $98.37-100 for insurance premiums to protect her interest as such administratrix in the mortgaged premises.
Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and by virtue of the statutes of the State of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the moneys so due and owing on said mortgage, and the interest thereon, from and after the date of this notice, said insurance premiums and interest thereon, as provided in said mortgage, and the cost and expense of this foreclosure, and the attorney fee provided by law; the said above described lands and premises will be sold at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of the Court House in the city of Adrian in said County of Lenawee (that being the place where the circuit court for said county of Lenawee is holden) on Saturday, the 26th day of May, A.D. 1888, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day.
Dated March 1st, 1888.
ALICE B. HARDENBURGH,
Administratrix of the estate of Addison Hardenburgh, deceased.
CHARLES BURRIDGE,
Attorney for Administratrix. mar1

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage made and executed on the third day of June 1886, by the Ohio & Michigan Coal and Manufacturing Company to Addison Hardenburg, and recorded on the 4th day of June, 1886, in office of Register of Deeds for the county of Lenawee, Michigan in Liber 117, of mortgages, on page 74, by virtue of which said default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas there is claimed to be due and owing at the date of this notice upon the said mortgage and note accompanying same for principal and interest the sum of $807.50, and whereas the undersigned administratrix has been compelled to pay the further sum of $16.75, for insurance premiums to protect her interest in the mortgaged premises, and whereas no suit or proceedings at law or in equity have been instituted to recover such indebtedness secured to be paid by said mortgage nor any part thereof.
Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the monies so due and owing on said mortgage, and interest from and after the date thereof, said insurance premiums and interest thereon, and the cost and expense of this foreclosure, the attorney fee provided by law, the undersigned will sell at public vendue to the highest bidder on the 19th day of May, A.D., 1888, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the front door of the court house in the city of Adrian in said county of Lenawee, (that being the place where the circuit court for said county of Lenawee, is holden) the lands and premises described in said mortgage, viz: All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, in the county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan, and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point or intersection of the north line of Shawnee street with the west line of the Jackson Branch of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad company in said village, thence north at right angles with said Shawnee street, thirty-seven (37) feet; thence northerly on westerly line of said Railroad lands to the northeast corner of a parcel of land formerly owned by Alpheus Stearns, and more recently owned by S. W. Temple; thence west on south line of Railroad depot grounds twelve rods to land formerly owned by Emma Temple; thence south on east line of said land formerly owned by said Emma Temple, as aforesaid about ten rods to the north line of Shawnee street aforesaid; thence east on north line of Shawnee street aforesaid thirteen rods and fourteen and one-half feet to place of beginning.

TEMPERANCE COLUMN.

Edited by a Committee of the W. C. T. U

TEMPERANCE AS A MISSIONARY WORK.

In presenting this subject to you I not in sympathy with foreign missionary work, or that I think too great an effort is being made on the part of the church to banish from heathen lands the sin of idolatry. But comparisons will present themselves to my mind, and when I think of all the wretchedness, poverty and crime caused by rum when I remember that the bible says "no drunkard shall enter the kingdom of heaven," and "though offenses must come, but woe unto that man by whom the offense cometh." I ask, is not the liquor traffic of our own land as great a curse to us, as the gods of wood and stone are to people who worship them? Is it not the christian's duty to destroy the rum power in this nation as much as to overthrow idolatry in India, China or Japan? And would not a society for the suppression of the vice of intemperance connected with the church be just as consistent as a missionary society?

Let us see. We are told that in heathen countries it is not considered a crime to take the lives of girl infants or sell them as slaves, and though mothers may plead and protest it is no avail, the babe must go, and as christians our hearts are touched and as a result there is not a christian church without its missionary society.

But how is it in our own land? Are our children safe? Do mothers feel in this land of churches and Sabbath schools, this land of christian government, that no one seeks the life of her child to destroy it, and with fiendish arts would drag him to a far more terrible death than pagan fathers ever inflicted on their little ones? Ah no! as the mother folds her baby boy in her arms, and looks into the future, as she counts the churches, then the saloons, the school-houses then the gambling dens and other places of iniquity, she realizes all too painfully that there are about ten chances of her boy becoming a wreck, to one of his becoming an educated christian man. And the burden is not lightened by the thought that the laws of this so called christian nation licenses a class of individuals and makes it a legitimate business for them to ruin that boy. Heathenism never invented an instrument of torture more cruel than that of the legalized saloon, when that saloon crosses the home threshold, for sad as it may be to lay our little ones in their infant graves, the grief is nothing compared to the anguish of that christian mother who puts her grown up boy in a drunkard's grave—soul and body both destroyed—the separation is forever. And friends, sixty thousand such graves are made every year, in this land. Think of it! Sixty thousand precious souls for which Jesus died, yearly hurled into a drunkard's eternity by this idol alcohol, and that too under the protection of law. Are we a christian nation? Is there not need of missionary work here?

Again we are told of the thousands of little girls, married at an early age, and the consequent suffering and death resulting from this heathenish practice. But how many little girls are doomed to lives of infamy and crime, sold for the basest purposes by drunken parents? Not married and left to widowhood, but turned out to die, because they no longer answer the purposes for which they were decoyed.

Has the church no million dollars for them? no whisper of peace for the restless souls and no pity for the fearful wretchedness that has been forced upon them?

Mrs. Leitch, a missionary in India, writes home, urging her friends to do more in the temperance work, for says she, "as the ship that brings the missionary also brings rum, somehow the natives associate the two together. Young men think it a part of religion to drink; and mother's seeing the ruin it is bringing on their sons are asking that the missionary may be kept from their shores."

Is that the kind of influence a christian nation should exert on the heathen?

Banish rum and you have as effectually helped the heathen as in any other way.

Now does this taxing or licensing the traffic mitigate the evil? Not in the least; it simply makes every tax payer where there is a legalized saloon a partner in the business for the saloon keepers' money and tax money comes from the same source and through the same channel. The consumer first passes it over the saloon counter and it represents degraded manhood just as much as that which the saloon keeper uses for his own purposes. How many tax payers are there who would go to a poor man unable to provide for his family the necessities of life and ask him to help pay his taxes? And yet this liquor tax money is still far worse; for in the one case you simply take the poor man's money, but in the other you not only take his money, but also his manhood.

What, I ask, has become of the manhood of the men of Michigan who are thus willing to have their taxes paid?

Again the saloonist must make his business profitable, increased taxation simply means increased efforts on his part to draw in new recruits and thus increase the customers. From whom do the people give in return for this tax money? the right for one man to ruin another, to bring sorrow and poverty into his home and to blight the happiness of wife and children. Ah, more than this the right to take priceless souls bought by the blood of Jesus and send them to eternal destruction. Is this christian?

But, says one, "I would like to do temperance work, but cannot because it has gone into politics, and the church must not become entangled with such matters." My brother or sister, methinks, if ever idolatry is banished from heathen countries the government will take hold of the matter and those nations will be shaken from center to circumference. Then just as your cherished hopes are about to be realized will you fold your hands and say you can't do missionary work because it has gone into politics? If a political party embraces the same principles of right that the church advocates and works for, the destruction of an evil, that the church has long worked and prayed for, is that a sufficient reason for christians to withdraw their sympathy and support from the work? I think not. Better say God bless such a political party and give it the right hand of fellowship. I know it is generally considered that a man can be a good christian and belong to any political party; and perhaps they can; but it seems to me that the same principles that govern men in business should also in politics. We are told. "Don't engage in any business or pleasure into which you cannot take Christ." Now don't belong to any political party if you cannot take the Lord Jesus with you into all the principals of that party. The right should be upheld, the wrong condemned, and if political parties get in the way, why they must take the consequences.

Another says, "I think the government has no right to say what a man shall eat or drink and thus infringe on his personal liberty.' A good argument were it not for the fact that those engaged in the liquor traffic were constantly violating the rights of others. Now the question is whose rights shall be protected?"

Righteous laws never interfere with the personal liberty of those who do right, but always with those who do wrong. Law exists to protect the right, and this can only be done by prohibiting wrong, for if wrong did not exist, right would not need protecting, consequently every law that prohibits a wrong, interferes with the personal liberty of no man, unless that man wants to do a wrong, while every law that protects an evil, or permits it to exist, interferes, more or less, with the individual liberty of every one that wishes to do right. Hence, no one has a right to do a wrong, either directly or indirectly, and any law that gives him the legal right to do so, is contrary to God's law, and a disgrace to a christian nation. But if law has no right to prohibit a business that is filling the state with paupers, criminals and idiots, has it any right to compel the sober and industrious portion of that state to take care of these saloon victims, by building prisons, jails, almshouses, lunatic asylums and reformitories? These buildings are largely a necessity because intemperance is not prohibited by law, and the money which they represent rightfully belongs to the tax payer and his family and should have been used by them to advance their own interests, or beautify their own homes.

The bible says, "Look not upon the wine when it is red, etc." Now if that prohibitory law of the Lord is kept, we cannot make, sell, drink or even give away that which intoxicates. Every reception and every other place where wine is used, I care not whether it is in the presidential mansion or the humblest cottage, that commandment is broken.

Then, friends, I would urge you to let none of these excuses keep you from engaging in the temperance work. If you cannot work one way, work another, but work. Work to keep the young from drinking. Work to reform men and work to drive the curse from our land. Remember that while you are indifferent and inactive the saloon keeper is not idle. He is doing all in his power to allure the young and draw into his ranks new recruits.

This evil must be destroyed or it will destroy us. If you say that the government cannot prohibit this liquor traffic, then you acknowledge that a Republican form of government is a failure. Any government that cannot suppress an evil and thus protect the lives and property of its citizens is a failure. We all know that the success and prosperity of a nation depend upon the virtue and intelligence of its rulers. Now in a republic the people are the rulers, hence it is of the utmost importance that such a government prohibits everything that degrades manhood or corrupts the morals of its people. If you say this cannot be done, then again I say a republican form of government is a failure, and its existence is but a question of time.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON FOR APRIL 22d. 1888.

THE TALENTS.—MATT. XXV, 14 30.

NOTES.—This parable is related as an additional reason for the watch, question of responsibility and labor. Study Luke xix, 12, on. Notice the resemblance in the leading thoughts and illustrations. It is evidently the same parable modified with another parable. Both undoubtedly are different forms of the same parable our Lord uttered to his disciples.—"For it is as when a man."—Here is a case in which the first part of the condition is stated but not the final part. This is not uncommon in the New Testament. Notice Mark xiii, 34.——"Going into another country."—As we would say going abroad.——"His servants."—Who were his property. They may have had a standing in his household as many did in those days; but they were his own to do with as he pleased.——"His goods."—His property, his substance, his means.——"According to his several ability."—Not an arbitrary method of distributing money, nor one by lot; but by a careful process of selection, thoughtful and discriminating. A talent, by the way, is a little above $1,000 in value, equivalent to three thousand Jewish shekels.——"Went away and digged in the earth."—Removed himself to a distance from the estate to sit in silence unobstructed and unwatched. He made a hole in the earth. Thus much would he labor in order not to work, and no more.——"Maketh, a reckoning."—Not a classic term in Greek; it means to settle accounts, cast them up.——"Lord I knew thee," etc.—His whole harangue was an index of his own mean, insensible, avaricious and contemptible character. It was himself he knew, not his master. He was the ungenerous and unjust one, not his generous and confiding Lord.——"Gathering where thou didst not scatter."—Is it not a tautological statement, but is a reference to the threshing-floor.——"Gathering where you have not threshed."—His master proceeds to chastise his insolent seryant with his own weapons.——"Put my money to the bankers."—The Greek represents the action of one at least indifferently casting down upon the table of the money-changers. He could have done that any way without much expenditure of vital energy.——"To him that hath."—By honestly acquiring and rightly using.——"Hath not."—What he ought to have, because he has not improved his means and opportunities.

INSTRUCTION.—Though there are many minor lessons to be gained from this parable of the talents, it is the central truth that is of the greatest importance. Briefly stated, it is that all the varied endowments of body, mind and soul are bestowed upon us according to our special capacities; that we are to use these gifts faithfully and do our best. The reward of fidelity is happy participation in the joy of the Lord, and in the kingdom of the Messiah; whereas, persistent stubbornness and neglect will insure the casting of the sinful one into Gehenna.

It is an overwhelming thought that every possession intrusted to us is a means of grace. Each is a link in the chain that shall bind us to God. Whether the link be the faculty for making horse shoes, a natural aptitude to healing bodies, or teaching the secrets of the soul's growth, it must be forged in the furnace of work that it may be accounted for in the day of reckoning.

No more is given to each than he can take care of, nor less either. The proportion has been exactly made by the Divine Chemist of man. He has calculated our capabilities to a nicety. By this principle of exact allotment of powers corresponding to each one's natural aptitude, he has highly individualized us. That shifts the responsibility to each one's own shoulders.

Independence is allowed every one in regard to the means of putting his talents to interest. Yet certain gifts in themselves presuppose certain definite lines of work. But these are not arbitrary. What is absolutely demanded is that the best be done under the given circumstances.

Spiritual idleness always generates excuses. It berates the injustice of penalties attached to sin. It says Christ is unreasonable in his requirements. It brings forth false and unrepenting hearts. It accuses the Christ of hardness, and thus pronounces its own sentence with a hardness that is inexorable. There is no instance of worse folly than to make false excuses. They condemn the sinner even as he utters them.

One of the rewards of labor is to receive interest without labor. It is cumulative because it is deserving. The penalty of slothfulness is to be denied credit for even a worthy action. The trend of character carries with it its own rewards and punishments.

For nearly a half century Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has been the most popular cough remedy in the world. The constantly increasing demand for this remedy proves it to be the very best specific for colds, coughs, and all diseases of the throat and lungs.

Does the Earth Really Move!

Science says that it does, but we cannot help wondering sometimes if there isn't some mistake about it, when we see how stubbornly certain old fogies cling to their musty and antiquated ideas. It was believed once that consumption was incurable, and although it is not, thousands of old-time physicians close their eyes and put their hands to their ears and refuse to abandon the theory. But for all that the world moves on, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery continues to rescue sufferers from consumptives' graves. It is sure cure for this dreaded disease, if taken in time. All scrofulous diseases—and consumption is included in the list—yield to it.

THE COUNTRY EDITOR.

There is an idea in the minds of many who ought to know better, that the "country editor" stands on the lowest platform of the profession, and that he who is employed in any capacity, no matter how humble, on a metropolitan journal is his superior. There is no greater mistake. An editor who has held important chairs in metropolitan offices, and who has the reputation of having been successful, remarked: "I do not hesitate to write the leaders of the most important journals, but I would tremble to undertake the management of a village newspaper." There is no place in the profession so difficult to fill as that of a country editor. In cities a man who can do one department well bothers himself about no other. Nor need he. He gets the knack of his specialty, and continues at it. But the country editor must be good in all departments. He must be well read on all subjects. He must be able to discern the trend of the public mind in politics, religion, and scientific topics; he must discuss agriculture and anarchy with equal precision; he must be fluent on polemics and politics; he must write of the President and pickpockets; he must mind men of high degree and descend to things of low estate; in short, he must be an "all 'round man." It is this that makes the position of a country editor so hard to fill. It is this training that makes the good country editor such a splendid manager for a metropolitan daily. There is no place, except in a country office, where such all round training can be had.

The position of a country editor is not held in the esteem it should be. Country papers are not respected as they ought to be. If a family can afford only one paper, it is that be the home paper, for it concerns a family more to know what is being done in its own country than it does to know the news of distant places. The city paper cannot give, and does not pretend to give, the local news that its country readers must have; but the good country paper does give a very large epitome of the world's news.

No other publication can supply the place of a good local paper. If both cannot be retained—if either the city journal or country newspaper must go, let it be the former; for nothing can supply the place of the local paper.—Printer's Circular.

It is so

That we are daily guaranteeing Kemp's Sarsaparilla to the people. After taking three fourths of a bottle without relief, we will refund the money. It is the greatest and best remedy in the market for cleansing the blood and giving you a new lease of life. A well known business man informs us he has gained 8 pounds on two bottles of this Sarsaparilla. Price 1.00. For sale by Baker & Hall.

HABITUAL constipation can be entirely cured by the use of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup after all other remedies have failed.

HEADACHE can be cured by Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup. It removes the cause by regulating the stomach, correcting improper digestion and general flow of the blood.

Unalterable Opinion.

A good dinner is said to be a powerful factor in changing a melancholy mood into a cheerful one. That one man firmly believed in this theory was proved by Turner, the artist, when, dangerously ill, he sent for an eminent physician.

"Well, doctor," said Turner, "you can diet? Tell me the truth."

"I am afraid I must beg you to lose no time in any worldly arrangements you desire to make."

"Wait a bit," said Turner, "you have had nothing to eat and drink yet, have you?"

"No, but that's of no consequence."

"Yes, it is. Go down stairs and you will find some refreshments; don't spare it, and then come up and see me again."

The doctor refreshed himself, and soon returned to his patient.

"Now then," said the latter, "what is it? Do you still think as badly of my case?"

"I grieve to say I cannot alter my opinion."

The artist turned his face to the wall and never spoke again. Later in the day he died.

Silenced by Mrs. Cleveland.

Mrs. Cleveland's tact is never, say those who have closely observed her, more admirable than when she finds it necessary to administer a deserved rebuke. It is said some one had the audacity to say to her: "Mrs. Cleveland, it seems a pity that you should, because of the etiquet which surrounds the exalted position of the wife of a President, be debarred from all the pleasures, such as dancing, natural to your youth. The President should have married your mother, and then, as the young lady of the White House, you could have had such a good time."

Mrs. Cleveland listened quietly, but with a rising color, and, when the other paused, answered with an unmistakable earnestness, but with no touch of asperity in her voice nor abruptness in her manner, as she drew herself up to her full height: "I am sure I am very glad I married my husband."

VILLAGE ORDINANCES.

ORDINANCE—RELATIVE TO FIRE LIMITS AND PREVENTION OF FIRES.

SEC. 1. No person shall fire any gun, pistol or cannon within the business portion of said village nor fire any gun, pistol or cannon in or across any streets anywhere in said village, nor fire any gun, pistol or cannon in any portion of said village, calculated to frighten, injure, or put persons in fear, without the consent of the council, under a penalty not to exceed twenty dollars, in the discretion of the court; but nothing in this section contained shall be construed to prohibit any military company existing under provisions of law from firing the salute of cannon when authorized by their commanding officer.

ORDINANCE—RELATIVE TO PROSECUTION FOR ILLEGAL SALE OF INTOXICATING DRINKS, AND DRUNKENNESS.

SEC. 1. It shall be the duty of the marshal of said village and his deputies, whenever as often as they shall know or be informed that any person is or recently has been drunken or disorderly within said village to immediately make or cause to be made before a justice of the peace of the township of Tecumseh, a complaint of such intoxication or drunkenness, according to section 24.

SEC. 2. It shall not be lawful for any person to become intoxicated or drunken within said village under a penalty not exceeding five dollars and costs for each offence, and it shall be the duty of the marshal of said village forthwith to arrest and convey such person found drunk in said village, before a justice of the peace, to be dealt with according to the provisions of this section, and for that purpose may detain him in custody until he shall recover from his intoxication.

ORDINANCE—TO PROHIBIT, PREVENT AND SUPPRESS GAMBLING.

Be it ordained by the common council of the Village of Tecumseh, Michigan, as follows:—

SEC. 1. No person shall participate in, aid or encourage, by their presence or otherwise, within the corporate limits, any game, gambling, lottery, trick, device or scheme, the purpose of which is to secure or obtain money or other property by chance, fraud or credit.

SEC. 2. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this ordinance shall, on conviction, before any justice of the peace in and for the county of Lenawee, be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars or be punished by imprisonment in the county jail of said county, not exceeding ninety days, or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the Village Marshal and Deputy Marshal of said village, to take notice of and report all infractions of this ordinance, that every person offending shall be dealt with according to law, and it shall be competent for said marshal or deputy of said Deputy Marshal to arrest without warrant and take before any justice of the peace, in and for the county of Lenawee, Michigan, any person who may in any way violate sec. 1 of this ordinance.

SEC. 4. This ordinance shall take immediate effect. Dated May 1st, 1882.

Resolved, by the Common Council of the Village of Tecumseh, Michigan, that the said Common Council do hereby offer a reward of twenty-five dollars to any person who shall give such information and evidence as shall lead to the apprehension and conviction, before any court of competent jurisdiction, of any person or persons, of the offence of keeping a common gambling house or gambling room, or place resorted to for the purpose of gambling, or for the apprehension and conviction of any person found in such gambling house, gambling room or place, gambling for money or other property.

AN ORDINANCE—TO PROHIBIT, PREVENT, AND SUPPRESS GAMBLING. Passed May 1, 1882.

SEC. 1. Be it ordained by the Common Council of the village of Tecumseh—No person shall any participate in, aid or encourage (by his presence or otherwise) within the corporate limits, any game, gambling, lottery, tricks, device or scheme, the purpose of which is to secure or obtain money or other property by chance, fraud or deceit.

SEC. 2. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this ordinance shall on conviction thereof be to any justice of the peace of the county of Lenawee, be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars and costs of prosecution, or in default be imprisoned not exceeding ninety days, or be punished by imprisonment not exceeding ninety days or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the village marshal and deputy marshals of said village to take notice of and report all infractions of this ordinance, that every person offending may be dealt with according to law and it shall be competent for said marshal or any of said deputy marshals to arrest without warrant, and take before any justice of the peace in the county of Lenawee, any person who may in any way violate section 1 of this ordinance.

SEC. 4. This ordinance shall take immediate effect.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Ida Pocklington has the measles.

Wm. J. Andrews is failing slowly we are sorry to learn, at present.

Coughs, colds and sore throats are going the rounds, and nearly every body has the combination.

Mr. Barlow is quite badly bothered with a smashed thumb, received several days since.

Ed. Harrison opened the Ice Cream season Saturday evening by treating his customers with a dish of cream at his market.

Davenport & Thomas sawed with one of the Hoxie picket saws, (manufactured at Holloway by George Hoxie.) 6,200 pickets in less than 10 hours, one day last week for W. P. Cadmus. Mr. Cadmus handled them all twice over.

Irving Bush is visiting at his grandmother's at present.

Theodore Allison left Monday in company with Richard Wiggins for St. John, to help build a large barn for Wm. Campbell.

Clara Lankin, who has been occupying rooms at Mrs M. A. Barrett's, doing dressmaking, has moved her business to the home of grandmother Corvell, north of the village, where she will be pleased to see any who wish dresses made.

The attendance at the L. C. S. held at Mrs. M. A. Barrett's last Friday evening was very large, and a very pleasant time enjoyed.

Rev. James Wright of Britton, will occupy the pulpit next Sabbath morning, and Rev. Peter Sharp in the evening, in the absence of Elder Benton.

There was a grand turnout on Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. Ella Waring at the mother's meeting of the W. C. T. U, at which time a very interesting program was carried out, and three new members added to their role of membership. The report of the W. C. T. U. held at AnnArbor last week, was read in full by Ella Patison, she being a delegate to the convention and took the proceedings herself. The report was a grand production and Miss Patison is deserving of much credit and many thanks by the Union here, for her valuable report. With a little practice she could command large wages and secure a place among the first reporters of the day.

The members of the local telegraph line here held a meeting Tuesday evening, and consolidated with the C. T. line at Tecumseh, which gives them a means of communication with Adrian, Sand Lake, etc.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. are in hopes to secure Mrs. Emma Obenauer of Manistee, who is giving Temperance talks in the county, to come to our little village in the near future.

Clara Temple began her first term of school Monday, in the Fred Morrell district, and Jennie Osgood began her first term in the Abe Harrington dist. We, in behalf of their many friends, wish them success.

Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Benton started Monday for a two week's visit with relatives and friends at Williamston, Mich., and to attend the marriage of a neice.

One of our neighbors desired me to ask the Editor of the HERALD, "if the corporation of Tecumseh are responsible if a person's team becomes frightened at the rubbish at the east end of the Globe Mill bridge, and does any damage to themselves, or any one else?"

W. E. Barrett, formerly of this place, who is firing a street railway engine, in San Diego, Cal., sends me a copy of the San Diego News, from which we take the following: "Motor No. 1, which was used yesterday to assist the trains on Coronado Height's road, jumped the track about four o'clock, when opposite the Bituminous Rock Paning Company's works. Engineer Jewett and his fireman, Barrett, after doing everything in their power to stop the motor, jumped from the windows and landed without serious injury. The engine stopped just in time to prevent it going over the embankment. Had it done so, the chances are that not only would the moter have been badly smashed, but fireman Barrett injured, as in jumping he landed where the moter would have struck had it moved a few inches further. As it was, but slight damage was done, and the public but little inconvenienced, as they were taken to the ferry by the way of Orange Ammee after the mishap. The motor was replaced on the track about 1 o'clock this P. M. Up to that time no trains having been run to the Heights since yesterday.

It has been announced that the Rev. Peter Sharp will occupy the M. E. church pulpit on next Sabbath evening, May 7th. Subject—Temperance. Two very important reasons exist as to why there should be a very general attendance upon this service, and it is hoped the church will be crowded. One reason is that Mr. Sharp has the impression that he is rather neglected and unappreciated by many upon whom he justly has a claim for sympathy and support in his declining years, and especially since his sad bereavement in the death of Mrs. Sharp. Another reason is, that upon this subject of temperance, his views and teaching are insustantial accord with the commonly received opinions of all temperance people outside the ranks of third party temperance workers. Therefore all non-partisan temperance people who have an interest in the outcome of the conflict between right and rum should come and hear Mr. Sharp's arguments and prepare themselves to refute successfully the noisy pretense of the radicals that "temperance is a political question."

UNSTED ODDS.

It is tacks time—a time to pull carpet tacks.

Oats all sown and now plowing for the corn crop in order.

The fifteen months old child of Frank Amsden fell over a rug on the floor and cracked one and bent the other bone in the arm between the elbow and hand, on Friday last, and it is feared that the arm will be a little crooked.

The three weeks old infant of Carry Barrows has experienced the measles already and is now preparing for the mumps and whooping cough.

The dwelling of Mrs. James Potter caught fire the other day from a defective chimney, but timely aid subdued the flames and prevented a conflagration.

The young people of the North Rome F. B. church will hold a concert at the church here next Sunday evening, if the weather permits.

A nice boy at James Segars of Rome, and when the four year old brother saw the little chap for the first time, he exclaimed, "Oh that will be just the thing to have in my show." He probably intends to start out in opposition to P. T. B.

Little Phebe Glenn had the misfortune to fall from a buggy on Thursday of last week and break her left arm just above the wrist, but the fracture was soon repaired by Dr. Ross and the little lady will soon be all right in a short time.

George Woodard has moved into his new house.

The Rome correspondent of the Adrian times was in this village on Friday last looking over our enterprising little berg but could not find any fault with the way our merchants carried on business.

Miss Jessie Short is expected home from Dakota the first of May, where she has been stopping during the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. John O. Maxwell were made one just thirty years ago from the 25th of April, but which one they have not yet determined, and on the evening of the latter date were preparing to retire when 50 or more of their neighbors rushed in upon them with well filled baskets and other mysterious bundles, which caused Mr. and Mrs. M, to postpone retiring, but to advance and welcome the intruders with a hearty handshake and and pleasant smile with an invitation to step into their spacious parlors where all the comforts of life are seen and appreciated. The evening was passed in jollification, speechmaking, singing and satisfying the cravings of the inner man with the good things that the table were well loaded with such as pies, cakes and a peculiar dish well filled with choice candies which caused considerable merriment. After presenting the couple with the tokens of friendship which were brot, the callers took their departure wishing John and Charlotte a happy and prosperous life during the remainder of their time that will be spent on this mundane sphere of action.

A very sad accident occured to Alex. Carson, a well disposed fifteen year old boy of this village, on Thursday afternoon of last week. He was at work for Kester Morey and was driving along the road with horses and wagon on which were laid plank and on them a harrow, and as he was crossing a bridge the team became frightened at some object and sprung suddenly causing the boy to be thrown to the hard ground, receiving a severe injury on the left side of his head, but the exact facts in the case are not known, as the boy was so badly injured that he could not give a discription of the accident. He was found and carried to a house near by and medical aid summoned which pronounced the soon coming of death caused by the inward bursting of a blood vessel, and his parents were sent for. His mother got there before he expired, but his father being section-boss here and at work down the road did not reach the bedside in time to see the son alive Death relieved him of his sufferings in two hours after the accident occurred. He was brought to his home in this village and on Saturday the services were conducted by Rev. Mowry, and the remains were taken to Raisin cemetery for interment. The parents are nearly prostrated with their sudden grief, and the neighbors all extend their entire sympathy to the bereaved family, consisting of parents, two brothers and two sisters, and deeply sympathize with them in this their first great grief.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Mrs. Minnie Hard is suffering from a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism.

Newcomb Brown, of Jackson, visited this place Monday of this week.

Miss Mary Tompkins arrived in town Monday and is at Henry Chase's.

E. Stinger has secured a position in a woolen mill in Missouri, and left the last of the week to begin his labors.

Monday afternoon Mensing and Semark, accompanied by Fred Sherwood, Henry F. Ellis and John Carey left for Bowling Green, Ohio, where they have contracts for several large buildings.

Miss Belle Dildine and friend, of Tecumseh, visited Ham Niblack and wife over Sunday.

Del Ordiway has rented Mrs. Franc Kies' house and is moving this week.

Mrs Franc Kies left Wednesday afternoon to occupy her fruit farm for the summer.

Miss Florence Russell, of Adrian, visited at Mrs. E. VanDeMark's the latter part of the week.

A. B. VanDeMark has been making some extensive changes in the interior of his residence.

We understand that Mel Coffin is to assist Geo. Gibson in his art rooms.

Geo. Gibson has his gallery all in running order and his rooms are both nice and convenient; do not think they are excelled by any in the county.

Mrs. Nimocks received a letter from the asylum at Kalamazoo, saying that Harry was failing rapidly and liable to drop away at any time.

Conrad Merhle moved his family Wednesday to River Raisin.

Mrs. Chas. W. Johnson and Nina, of Detroit, are visiting her parents here this week.

The base ball season was opened here last Saturday afternoon by the members of the Clinton B. B. club and a picked nine. It proved to be quite an interesting game. There were some fine plays made on both sides and it was no easy victory for the regular club. Score 12 to 8 in favor of the C. B. B. club.

Mrs. J. Willetts of Rockford, Mich., is visiting at Peter Kishpaugh's.

The sugar social at the church last Friday evening was a success. A fair crowd was in attendance and things passed off very well.

We are informed that a new saw mill will be built in the near future on the old mill grounds. We of course are happy to hear of some boom for our city.

Until last week we supposed from what we had heard that all the low-lived, mean people lived at Holloway. But we were obliged to change our opinion. A message of great importance came to the telegraph office at this place for a person living about 2½ miles northwest, and the agent wished to get it delivered. So, hoping to do the person addressed a favor, ye reporter hired a clerk, borrowed a horse and delivered the message. We had the cheek to ask therefor the large sum of 75 cents, which they refused to pay. Our opinion is that a person who will do this would cheat his own mother out of her last cent.

Abba Bethel was the Holloway recipient of a fine May basket last Tuesday evening. It was a large basket artistically covered with beautiful paper. The handle being decorated with tin-foil and at each end bore a lovely bouquet. There was suspended from the handles a large candy heart and a bunch of Sycamore buds. The basket was thoughtfully filled with cheese, candy, peanuts and other dainties too numerous to mention. Although Adda hasn't the slightest idea who presented it she knows that the manufacturer is an artist at the business. If said artist will make himself known to the community it is not unlikely that a good trade could be worked up for him.

MACON MUSIC.

The new library has arrived.

Blanche Mills is at home from the Normal, sick with the measles.

Sunday-school was reorganized last Sunday morning at the M. E. church.

Several ladies at the Corners received Florida moss a few weeks ago.

Mrs. Hebron Langan, who has been visiting friends here for three weeks past, returned to her home in Douglas last Monday.

Rev Moon, of Hillsdale, tarried with us a week, and during that time delivered some eloquent sermons. He gave general satisfaction, and undoubtedly the society would have engaged him had it not been for his advanced age.

A POINTER.

When President Cleveland issued his remarkable tariff message in December, timorous Democrats with protective predelictions foresaw all sorts of danger to the party. They had so long been accustomed to a passive policy that they acted as if they really were afraid some Republicans might be offended at the Democratic president's boldness. They seemingly forgot that the Democratic party is largely in the majority in this country, and that whatever pleases that party will have the strength of majority for its support. They forgot, also, that upon the subject of tariff reform thousands upon thousands of Republicans favor a radical reduction of taxation and stand ready to rally themselves with the party which will the most earnestly declare for reform. Republican politicians, also, with sensibilities blinded by former successes, imagined a Democratic blunder had been committed whereby the old plunderers would again come into power. Tariff was to be the rock upon which Democracy would split, and in states where so-called protective industries were located the Republicans hoped to obtain political supremacy. The south was to be a fruitful field of protective culture and the uncertainty of Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia and Louisiana was predicted. This bloviating claim of the Republicans had little effect upon Democratic congressmen, some of whom are more zealous for success by policy than by principle. Tariff reform legislation has not been as responsive as the people hoped after the grand message of the president was promulgated. There seemed to be too many timid fellows in congress, and they needed a considerable prodding as a supplement to the message.

The state election in Louisiana must be regarded as a popular test of the president's tariff doctrine, and the decisive majority which the democratic candidates there received, upon the fullest vote cast since the war, must dispel all republican hope of carrying a single southern state at the next November election. Politically, this is encouraging to the Democratic party and, in the cause of the people, the Louisana election must be looked upon as a great advancement. The sugar producers of that commonwealth are of the favored class, but in tax reduction they understand lies the certainty of more rapid American progress, and they are loyal to general interests. In this election Democratic congressmen should read the signs of the times. Tax reduction is the watchword of the people. Times have been changing. They have greatly changed since the present congress was elected. The change has crystallized since President Cleveland concentrated tariff views into a concise, pointed and clear statement of conditions and requirements. There is now a reform demand greater than the voting strength of one party. It is general, and springs from every locality. The lesson of the Louisiana election should be heeded by the democratic house of representatives. A tariff bill should pass. The democrats in congress should unite upon the great issue in which all people are interested and which the majority most decidedly favor. The election in Louisiana not only indicates the political complexion of the southern states, but it determines the popularity of the new and issue of low tariff which the president has assisted his party in making the one issue of this presidential campaign. The course will win and the president will win.—Toledo Blade.

A HINT TO REPUBLICAN LEADERS.

The bold and unanswerable tariff speech of Congressman Nelson, of Minnesota, one of the ablest Republicans of the Northwest, should admonish the Republican leaders of the party peril from party power. Mr. Nelson simply spoke for the great mass of all parties in the West and Northwest, and he is supported by every leading Republican journal of that section.

And while such men as Nelson are speaking for relief from monopoly tariff thraldom in the West, the Providence Journal, for more than a generation the Republican organ of the manufacturers of New England, thus responds to Nelson's appeal for honest tariff revision in the interest of our industries:

Is not Nelson, of Minnesota, with forty-four thousand votes, as entitled to his beliefs as Boutelle, of Maine, with seventeen thousand votes? Are not the consumers of the Northwest as entitled to the necessaries of life as we of New England are to free and unlimited cotton to keep our mills running? This is a very poor time for a sincere well-wisher of the Republican party to obstinately stand in the way of progress and of the good of the people. Now is the time for free and intelligent discussion, carefully prepared arguments and an earnest search for the truth whenever it can be found. These economic questions are pressing upon us every hour, they are the live issues of the day, and they must be met by thinking men, and not by howling dervishes. We believe that the Republican party has a great future before it in these United States, under the guidance of such principles as those enunciated by Mr. Nelson and the constituency behind him. These men will force their way to the front as soon as the real work of the campaign begins, and the present miscellaneous horde of self-appointed leaders will skulk off into the rear, where they can associate with the lame, the halt the blind and those who are kept alive to save their funeral expenses.

W. I. Judge Kelly, Mr. Reed and other Republican leaders bend or be broken on the tariff issue.—Philadelphia Times.

WHAT PROTECTION MEANS!

Protection means that by the operation of law a bonus is given to persons in certain industries, which bonus must be paid by those who use their products, by compelling them to pay more than they otherwise would. Call it what you will—building up American labor, or any other sugar-coated pill—strip it of the sugar coating and somebody pays out more by the operation of law for which he gets nothing in return, and the added sum is given by law to the producer. It is improper and iniquitous, and I don't hesitate to say that there is no jurisdiction for any form of robbery, no matter under what sanction it is made. No plea can answer satisfactorily the statement that the government is taking out of the pocket of one man money to put in the pocket of another. Call it developing the country, if you will; it is immoral and unjust that some man is given the right by law to put his hand in my pocket. But it isn't so. We deny that it does develop the industries of the country. I believe the great Lawgiver gave to this world laws that are equally dominant. Society developes under natural laws, if let alone, just as does the plant. The mutual development of prosperity makes all countries the richer that contribute to that development. It is the rapid and profitable exchange of commodities of different nations that makes us rich. The idea that we can tax each other until we are all rich—that like the skarks, we can feed on each other [illegible] and all be unclaten and all as rich as if we had eaten all the others—belongs to a bygone age. There is no more doubt that day by day we are growing to understand more perfectly the idea of mutual concession. The idea of a prohibitory tariff will be looked upon by our children as we look upon the old style of getting wives by killing of their husbands. They are both parts of barbarism.

Shall we in time of peace tax ourselves as if war were still flagrant? The Democratic party answers no. We have tried it 27 years. They say it has made us rich. We are rich. I will not say that by the operation of the tariff the American people have been impoverished. I would be a fool to argue so. But I do say that the tariff has made wealth unequally and unjustly distributed. Its operations have been to make enormous fortunes possible. Is the system that permits a man in twenty years to amass a fortune of two hundred millions a proper system for a free country? I don't criticise the men, but the system that makes it possible for them to make the earnings of people as good as they and put it in their pockets. If the income of the people of this country were distributed equally it would give each about $200 a year to live on, and the surplus would give each $37 more. There can be no need of rich men. The man who is compelled to follow the trading of his father has his life mapped out and is distinguished. Yet the productive system has the beginning of caste. It is the beginning of separation into classes.

Money is poured into the treasury until we have a surplus of eighty millions, and there is danger of financial ruin. It has been withdrawn from circulation, taken from the people, drop by drop, and hundred by hundred from industry. Our hands are tied and we cannot pay our debts with our money. The very nature of our government is undergoing a change under the pressure of surplus. It is the genesis of all the schemes before congress. How many expect a gentleman to go to Washington to get to spend it. Is surplus is breeding a host of corrupt and rapacious animals that are destroying our morality.—Congressman Breckenridge, of Kentucky.

HE YIELDED.

The Triumph Scored by a Persuasive Female Book Agent.

She was a pretty woman, and she bowed to me bewitchingly as she came in. She held up one finger archly, and said imperatively:

"Now, sir, I want you to stop your writing and look at my book."

Then she blushed charmingly as if embarrassed at my look of amazement. I said:

"My dear madam, I am busy today, and I beg you will excuse me."

She sat down beside and made herself comfortable at once.

"Now, don't let me hear another word about that. You are going to buy a book of course."

"But, my dear——"

She took my hand gently but firmly in hers.

"I know—you are so busy, man—you write all day and are too tired to read—you hardly find time to look at the paper—you——"

"Yes, madam, that is precisely the case."

She chucked me deliberately under the chin.

"Do you mean to say that you are going to refuse me a miserable little dollar for this beautiful book?"

I gasped feebly and glanced at my office boy. He was evidently interested. I said:

"You must be a successful book agent; you have the most fetching qualities I have ever seen."

Rash words!

She rose at once, and sitting down upon the arm of my chair threw one arm around my neck and bending down looked tenderly into my eyes.

"Now, you know, darling, you are going to do just what I say, you are going to buy——"

I heard my office boy chuckle to himself. I protested. I said:

"My dear madam, this is really—embarrassing—do you know—I am a married man—that I——"

She replied: "I have nothing to do with that. I am here for business."

I replied: "That statement is unnecessary, the fact is quite apparent. But I am really fond of my wife. You've got hold of the wrong man."

She seemed a little hurt at this, but she did not take her arm from my neck. She remained in this compromising attitude apparently lost in thought. I broke into a cold sweat.

"I'll tell you what I'll do," she said, suddenly, rinsing her face dangerously near my own, "if you'll take a copy of that book I'll promise not to kiss you before I leave the office."

I bought the book.

Genteel Quacks.

"Yes, it pays," said a big, fat physician, with a name which is known throughout the medical world. "I have a practice worth $40,000 a year." "Women"? "Yes, you've guessed it first time. They pay $10 every time they come into my office. When one gets on my list I tell you is she stays. This is quackery—gilt-edged, genteel quackery—to keep suffering woman paying tribute year in and year out, and doing them no good. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures the peculiar weaknesses and diseases of women. It does not lie to them nor rob them.

IMPORTANT.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and carriage Hire and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot. Elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1.00 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

The people as a mass seldom make mistakes. This accounts for a large demand for Dr. Bigelow's Positive cough Cure. It has given such perfect satisfaction that some druggists offer an imitation on which they make a large profit. Beware of both the imitation and the druggist, both will cheat you. The genuine is sold by Dr. Geo. Furguson and will promptly and safely cure coughs, colds, and all throat and lung diseases. Price 50c.

A Sensible Man

Would use Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs. It is curing more cases of Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup and all Throat and Lung Troubles, that any other medicine. The proprietor has authorized Baker & Hall, to refund the money if after taking three-fourths of a bottle, relief is not obtained. Price 50c and 1 Trial size free.

A Dressmaker's Experience.

DEAR SIR:—As Mr. Hinman, the druggist, told you I am a great friend of your remedy. I have used it at intervals during the past 12 years. It carried me safely through the critical period of change of life without a single sick day and it did great things for me in many ways.

I always recommended it where I see a case that needs it. It always does splendidly, often accomplishing more than you have ever claimed for it, and more than any one would readily believe who did not personally know the cases.

I now consider myself well, but I work hard, at my business—dressmaking, and when I am tired and nervous a small dose of Zoa Phora quiets and restores. I always have it in my house. Yours truly,

MRS. MARY C. CHANDLER

Battle Creek, Mich. February 20, 1888. To H. G. Coleman, Sarcelay, N. Y.—It is rapidly good at all times of life.

Symptoms of Heart Disease.

Diseased hearts are as common as disease of lungs, kidneys or stomach, but far less understood. The symptoms are shortness of breath, when exercising, fluttering or pressure on the chest, pain, weak or hungry spells, dizziness, fainting or tenderness in the side, swelling feet, dropsy, etc. Impeded circulation of the blood in the lungs, stomach, kidneys, liver and brain causes other symptoms. The only reliable remedy for the heart yet discovered is Dr. Miles' New Cure. Try it and be convinced. Sold by Baker & Hall.

The Latest Tornado

The surprising manner in which the country is being swept by the great discovery of Dr. Miles for curing the many disease that orginate in the nerves is astonishing all who know the facts. The Restorative Nervine & Hall cures weakness, want of appetite, exhaustion, debility from overwork, care, worry and dissipation. It takes the place of stimulates, opiates, chloral, etc., and cures all nervous troubles. It contains no morphine, opium or dangerous drugs.

We especially invite the attention of mothers and daughters to page 9, of our medical pamphlet.

RHEUMATIC SYRUP CO.
Jackson, Mich.

THERE is nothing more miraculous in its effects, entirely removing from the face moth patches or brown spots purely by its action on the blood, than Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup.

A Letter from the Pastor of the M. E. Church.

FRANKLIN, OAKLAND CO., MICH., Dec 2, 1887.

Rheumatic Syrup Company:

DEAR SIRS—Mr. A. A. Rust, of this place furnished me one bottle of your Rheumatic Syrup. Have taken about two thirds of it. Before taking it the slightest change in the weather affected me very much. I am now almost entirely free from the awful twinges of rheumatism, and changes in the weather do not affect me. S. A. LONG, Pastor of Methodist Church, Franklin, Mich.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

CURES ALL HUMORS,

from a common Botch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eruptive Diseases rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vigorous strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "CONSUMPTION CURE," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, and pulmonic, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an unequaled remedy.

Sold by druggists at $1.00, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

THE LITTLE RED RIBBON.

Song not of battles nor conquerors laden
With trophies their valor has won in the strife,
My song is the love of a shy little maiden
Who smiled upon me in the morning of life.
I whispered my passion, though clumsily spoken,
With [illegible]

With the ring of betrothal I plead for a token—
The little red ribbon she wore in her hair.

Though now it is faded,
I picture it braided
The way that it shimmered that night on the stair;
And often I kiss it
And think how I'd miss it—
The little red ribbon she wore in her hair.

The years have flown by, and her locks have grown whiter,
I smile when she speaks of the gray in the gold;
I whisper to her that her glances are brighter,
Her dimples more winning than ever of old.
Our love-life has sadness more laughing than weeping,
We chase with fond kisses the footprints of care,
But my little wife never dreams I am keeping
The little red ribbon she wore in her hair.

Though faded and crinkled,
And rumpled and wrinkled,
The bonnet, bright looping that glistened so fair—
Far down in my pocket,
It lies in a locket—
The little red ribbon she wore in her hair.

UNCLE SUNDAY.

"I hold yo' horse, maaster, whilse you 'sist de lady ter dismount. I jess fasten him here, so, till one them stable boys comes derreckly an' takes him yonder. Walk right in, sah, an' I'll take yo' keeds to my mistus."

As they entered the broad hall the old man peered about anxiously, as though surprised at not finding at least one hall-boy on duty. He swung the parlor door open and ushered the guests in with the air of a man who resumes once familiar duties under stress of peculiar circumstances.

Ascending to the second story with the cards designated them to his mistress with the free comment that "They look like our kind of folks—quality folks—Miss Marg'ret. I jest put my best foot forrards."

Presently he reappeared at the door of the parlor and announced, "Miss Delplaine be down presently, sah," his white head bowing low meanwhile.

Retiring then with all the dignity of an ancient butler he gained the back hall and at once quickened his pace to something as nearly resembling a run as his old legs could accomplish, muttering to himself as he went.

"As soon's Miss Marg'ret get dar in the parlor, de fus' thing she do be to open dem front curtains 'fore I c'n get de horse tooken away."

With trembling, eager hands he loosened the hitching strap, a heroic undertaking in itself, for Uncle Sunday was mighty afraid of horses, nor did he breathe comfortably till his charge was safe in the carriage house.

"I like to unloose him if I knowed I was shore I could get him hitched agin," he soliloquised. "'Sides dat, I ain't so shore I got anything to feed hin 'cep' grass, an' he don look like a horse w'at been raised on grass, nuther."

Painfully the old man crept to the loft, and thankfully gathered and threw down a little hay which he found there, ruthlessly robbing a hen of her nest in his eagerness to get enough.

"Now dat dar's 'complished satisfactory, I like ter know how long dey purposes ter stay. Hope ter goodness Miss Marg'ret aint goin' ast 'em ter stay ter dinner!"

He locked the door of the stable, and hurried back to the house. "If dey does stay,—an' dere ain's no reckonin' on w'at Miss Marg'ret goin' ter do,—de dignerty ob de house got ter be kep' up, but blest if I knows how dis ime."

Uncle Sunday had spent most of the latter years of his life in "keeping up the dignity of the house." Born on the estate in the days when slavery was an institution still tolerated in New York, though very rare, he had spent his youth in that happy idleness which "young maaster's valley" looked back upon from his eminence of four-score years as the veritable age of gold. He had accompanied his charge to college, assisted in the pranks and honors of that far-away time, and was rewarded with the honorable post of butler.

Years passed. The master married, was a father, grew old, and died, commending with his dying breath the care of his orphan daughter to the servant who had been so faithful to him. Margaret's mother trusted the faithful negro as her parent had, done, and at the end of her brief wedded life, she in turn invested Uncle Sunday with a sacred charge—the comfort and well being of her infant, Margaret.

But the years, coming with many promises, departed as robbers, carrying with them bank stock and five stock, servants and securities.

Those who had eaten long of the bread of the Delplaines went regretfully to those who could afford to pay and feed them. As each servitor followed his predecessor down the long drive under the elms, Uncle Sunday took up the abandoned task without a complaint or murmur.

First he became gardener, then hall-porter, afterward cook, and finally assumed the duties of that useful creature known in domestic economy as "second girl." If a hero is one who never fails to rise to his occasion, I leave you to name Uncle Sunday.

As he stole into the house again with a satisfied feeling of having accomplished another of the allusions to which he devoted much of his time,—that is to say, having, as he imagined, impressed upon the visitors the idea that the Delplaines still supported a proper retinue,—Miss Margaret came swiftly to find him.

"Uncle Sunday, Judge Lord is an old friend of father's from the West. He and his wife will dine with me to-day."

"For de good gracious sake," Miss Marg'ret! We ain't got nuthin' 'tall ter set befo' 'em."

"Oh, you will manage somehow. You know you always do," she replied lightly, and returned to her guests, leaving the perplexed negro to shake his snowy wool in despair.

"Dis sorter thing make a man ole befo' his time!" he groaned. "W'at I goin' do? De ain' no trest at de butcher, an' de ole hen mighty tough. De ain' no gyarden sass to speak of, nuther, nor no fiddlin's fo' de las' course. How I goin' keep up de dignerty if Miss Marg'ret act like dis?"

Uncle Sunday might confess defeat; he often did, but he stopped there. He never failed. By some process of chemistry known only to the great few, the toughness of the fowl was reduced to a minimum. With wine and eggs a desert was concocted; tomatoes lent their disguising influence to the soup, and the judge was full of compliments to his hostess on the perfect service rendered by her venerable butler.

"He seems an admirable manager," added Mrs. Lord. "I wish that I could find such a one. I can imagine that your other servants give you no trouble while he regulates affairs."

experience the slightest inconvenience from that source.

If the major domo dreamed that his trials were over, he reckoned wildly. His mistress called upon him as he regarded, with a mingling of regret and pride, the remains of the dinner that had both taxed and attested his ability, and announced, in her usual nonchalant way, that the Lords would rest with them till the morrow. The lamentations of the privileged servant were instant and vehement.

"Now, Miss Marg'ret, w'at I ever done to you that you should treat me dis fashion? 'Ain' I give de judge a mighty fa' dinner, when you I know you'se'f we hadn' nothin' in de house 'cept de cellar?"

"But I clar to gracious, Miss Marg'ret, I clean beat dis time. Let alone de judge's horse, w'at I earnt unhitch to save my soul, even 'lowin' I had anything to give him when I done got him unhitched, dar's de supper an' de breakfus', an' all the udder wukkin ter foller. We's quality, Miss Marg'ret, an' we got to do like quality and look like quality, an'"—he added, with pathos—"it beats my time to conjure how we'se goin' to do it."

But Miss Margaret only laughed airily at the old man's perplexity.

"You will accomplish it somehow, Uncle Sunday; you know that you always do."

So Uncle Sunday went about it. He disposed of the horse question by persuading a darkey on a farm adjoining to take that labor off his hands. Then he turned his attention to the question of provender for his human charges. Supper was arranged for, as his mistress had decreed, "somehow." Breakfast, after a masterly struggle with inadequacies, he succeeded in serving to the satisfaction of all parties concerned.

The mysteries of the upper region he grappled with successfully, as usual. The judge was complacent as he viewed the polish on his boots, and the judge's lady found no detail of comfort wanting in her chamber. Surely Miss Delplaine was blessed in having such servants in her house—so efficient yet so unobtrusive!

After breakfast Uncle Sunday waited confidently for the order to have the judge's carriage brought around; he contemplated and enjoyed in advance Miss Delplaine's pleased surprise when the newly acquired negro should appear in the place of groom. He was thinking of this when his mistress came to him for the third time with the announcement that the visitors had consented to prolong their stay.

Uncle Sunday was too crushed to respond. There seemed to be no further possility of avoiding disgrace. His wrinkled cheeks were actually wet with tears as he groped his way into the buttery, and fell on his knees by the dresser. Then he lifted up his voice, softly, out of respect to the proprietors of the house, but fervently, after the manner of his race, and said:

"Lawd, I ain't nothin' but a pore ole niggah w'ats doin' de bes' he kin to save his house from bein' disgraced. Ef it ain't askin' too much I wish you done kill dis ole man right now, or else perwide me somethin' to put into de stall and on de table for dis yere jedge f'um out Wes' w'ats cum ter devour us like de locusses devour the chillun of Izrul.

"Ise a weeked ole sinner, O Lawd! but I ain' done bad enough ter desurb dat my ole gray hair be brought down wid disgrace dis way, nohow. I ain' a askin' nuthin' fer my own sef dis time, but fo' de fambly—dey's quality Lawd! Gib us dis day our daily bread, and other things accorjun."

Uncle Sunday got up from his knees somewhat stiff and sore, but greatly comforted. A man of resources he was inspired with one of more than ordinary greatness now.

Perhaps his instinctive consultation with the ancient watch which his master had given him years ago, suggested a plan. The open face of this confidential friend smiled up at him and the hands seemed to make signs. What did they propose?

Uncle Sunday started by the nearest path for the village.

"What'll you gib me for dis watch?" he asked the storekeeper as he laid that tried friend on the counter and leaned his trembling brown hands heavily beside it.

"I don't know. Let me have a look at your old turnip."

He examined it with so much carelessness and want of feeling that Uncle Sunday thought he should faint.

"What do you want for this old thing?"

The negro thought rapidly. He did not know anything about the value of such property, so he blundered upon a figure.

"Sixteen dollars, sar."

"Hoo!" shouted White. "Do you throw yourself in along of the watch? I'll give you three for it."

"Call it fo', Mr. White. Call it fo'—an even fo'"—suggested our friend.

"Nope. Tell you what I will do. I'll make it three and a half."

He turned to the till, and laid $3.50 on the counter, then looked inquiringly at his customer. The watch lay between them; beside it were the bright coins.

Uncle Sunday wavered. There came up before him the face of his old master, of the first day that the watch had been worn, with a pride that could hardly be concealed. Then he remembered Miss Margaret, and the necessities of her house.

"Well! What are you going to do?"

"I'll take it, Mr. White."

White's large palm swept the watch towards him, but the negro, with a cry that was pitiful, stretched out his hands involuntarily after it.

"Jes' once mo', sah? Jes' lemme hol' it in my han' once mo'."

It was given to him. He seemed to caress it, he placed it near his ear and listened to its long familiar voice; he turned his back to the store-keeper for a moment, during which time no one may know what sacred rite was performed, but when he handed it suddenly to its owner, there was a drop of water on the crystal.

"Hold on, uncle" shouted White, as the old man struck blindly for the door. "You forgot to take your money. And say," he added, "I guess I may as well make that four, after all."

When Uncle Sunday went mournfully back over the stile across the field, his arms were fully of bundles and his heart burdened with grief. Others might eat and be satisfied, but he felt that no dinner would ever so fill out his waistcoat that he should cease to have a sensation of vacuum about the region of his pocket where his watch had reposed.

The judge dined well that evening. The judge's horse had a full measure of feed, and the clock work of domestic service in Miss Delplaine's household seemed unimpaired by age or accident. In the morning the judge called for his horse, and the assistant negro brought him round; so the credit of the family was saved, but at what a cost nobody guessed.

White, the storekeeper, had been in the West in his youth, and singularly enough, lived in the town which proudly owned Judge Lord; so it happened when that gentleman came driving down from the Delplaine house, that he was recognized by the merchant.

"Does my eyes good to see you, judge," changed. "How long you been in town?"

"Two days."

"Two days? sho—where you been stopping?"

"We have been visiting Miss Delplaine's. By the way, what a house that is, old fashioned style that we Western people imagine has died out. I must say, White, that for a good table and unexampled service I have never been better entertained. She must be a good patron of yours, eh?"

White looked at the judge in perplexity for a moment, and then, seeing that the latter was evidently in earnest, he shook hands again with the great man, and went back to his store with the look of one who has made a discovery.

"Great guns! That nigger is the greatest genius in the State of New York. 'Best feed and best service,' that's what the judge said, that's what gets me."

How it happened I never could tell exactly, but Uncle Sunday might have been seen wearing his much loved watch one bright day soon after this, and he wore it till he died.

CHRISTENING A PAPOOSE.

The First Sioux Indian Babe Born in England.

When Little Chief, of the Ugawalla band of Sioux Indians, became the happy father of a bouncing "papoose" the other week he was prevailed upon to have it baptized according to the rites of the English church.

As Little Chief's daughter was the first Sioux Indian babe born in England the occurrence was made the occasion of a general rejoicing, and, as no performance of the wild west show was given on Ash Wednesday, an excellent opportunity was afforded of bringing the affair to an issue, as well as giving the cowboys and others much needed rest. St. Clement's church, Salford, was the scene of the ceremony, and here at the hour of 6 P. M. was assembled a crowd of anxious and curious persons, principally of the feminine persuasion, desirous of participating in proceedings the like of which they may be destined to never see again. The affair consequently was surrounded by a dash of romance, as well as novelty, and the sight when all the Indian warriors, attired in their best blankets and other paraphenalia, were assembled in the various pews, was a most remarkable and impressive one.

The red men, straight as an arrow, and with the characteristic stolidity of their race, sat with immovable features and an apparently stoic indifference to the curious stare of the assembled congregation. Not even when the ceremony was taking place at the font behind them did they turn their heads or show that they were in the least interested. They, however, fully entered into the devotional proceedings, and the sight of all these strange people, with bowed heads and bended knees, paying tribute to the white man's God, was a very striking one. "Nearer, My God to Thee" was chanted by the young "braves" in a low, but not unmusical tone of voice, which greatly added to the romantic nature of the proceedings. Miss "Francis Victoria Alexandra Little Chief" will no doubt be considered a very fortunate young lady by the members of her tribe, and when she grows old enough to understand the meaning of the remarkable necklace presented to her by Mr. A. H. Gardner, her godfather, she will, perhaps, reflect with wonderment upon the singularity of her birth and baptism. At the close the "papoose" was duly handed round for inspection by those present amid many expressons of "Oh, the little dear," and certain attempts at osculatory exercise by the ladies present. In the evening the Indians kept up the celebration in camp in right royal fashion, and a privileged few, under the command of the genial Mr. Burke, assembled at "Alec" Miller's hostelry, the Trafford Arms, were a most enjoyable time was spent. After a substantial tea had been done full justice to; the "sparkling vintage" was passed round, and convivality and good fellowship reigned supreme.

History of the Walnut.

The walnut is indigenous to upper Asia, and in the mountainous regions of Persia is found growing wild. It was known to the Romans as the juglans regia or royal tree of Jupiter. It was introduced into Italy at the beginning of the Christian era and was gradually spread over western Europe. It was introduced into England many centuries ago from France, which country was then called Gaul, and some authorities say the word "walnut" is a corruption of "gaulnut" (Webster gives the derivation, however, from an Anglo-Saxon word, "wealth-hunt," from "wealth" a foreigner, a stranger, and "hunt" a nut.) In Europe it is simply "walnut," and the name English walnut used in this country was bestowed by the colonists of Virginia to distinguish it from the native American black walnut. The tree seems to flourish everywhere. It thrives in rich and poor land, on mountain and in valley, in rock and barren soil, where hardly anything else can be grown. But in deep soil with a moist bottom the English walnut grows luxuriantly and yields large crops at a comparatively young age.

How to Speculate.

A young man who had lately entered the speculative field requested an old member of the stock exchange to give him a few "pointers," and the broker promptly sent the young man to Mr. Isidore Wormser who, he stated, was much better qualified to post a beginner.

The young man entered Mr. Wormser's office and said respectfully:

"I am here, Mr. Wormser, to ask your advice."

"Well, what is it about?" queried Mr. Wormser, somewhat testily.

"I wish you would tell me how to make money in stocks."

"U-m-m. All right, my young friend. I will give you some valuable information, but you mustn't give it away."

"I'll keep it to myself, sir, mum's the word."

Thus assured, Mr. Wormser called his visiter close to him and whispered in his ear:

"The great recipe for success is to always buy cheap and sell dear. If you will follow my advice you may be a rich man one of these days."

Explained.

A gentleman talking with a young lady said that he had failed to keep abreast of the scientific advance of the age.

"For instance," he said, "I don't understand how the incandescent light, now used in some buildings and in railway cars, is procured."

"Oh, it's very simple," said the lady, with the air of one who knows. "You just turn a little button over the lamp, and the light appears at once."

MAKING DIAMONDS SPARKLE.

The Latest Invention to Make the Jewels More Brilliant.

Many persons have been puzzled to understand why the diamonds worn in ear-[illegible] ceaseless, quivering motion. It makes no difference that the head of the wearer is in perfect repose, and that she is even speechless, and therefore exerting no muscle of face or feature. The ceaseless twinkle of the diamond goes on, enhancing greatly the dazzling beauty of the gem. The secret is in the setting of the diamond, and the method is a patent device. The patentee is reaping a royalty of $50 apiece from every manufacturing jeweler to whom he sells the privilege of using it. The stone is set in the usual manner, except that a band like the handle of a diminutive basket is attached to the framework. On the other side of this band is a cup-like cavity. On the lower part of the hoop is a projecting pin pointed with rhodium, a metal which never wears out—somewhat like iridium with which gold pens are tipped. Now, when the diamonds are put in position on the hoop the rhodium point projects into the cup. The result is what scientist would call a condition of unstable equilibrium. Like the pea blown with a pipe by a schoolboy, the diamond is given no rest, with the difference that no effect is required to keep it dancing. The metal point never wears out.

The Chinaman's Devotion to Rice.

The Chinaman's devotion to rice is as great as the Englishman's to his dinner, and at their regular times for "chow"—11 in the morning and 5 in the afternoon—nothing can take him away from his bowl of rice. As all the city life is al fresco one sees miles of feeding Chinamen if he progresses through the streets at their meal hours. In each open room or shop the scene is the same—a circle of dirty heathens gathered around a table, shoveling the rice into their mouths as fast as chop sticks can play, the edge of the bowls being held to their mouths merely as a funnel to direct the stream. One can stand in the shops vainly waiting to purchase, and a surly Chinaman will only come forward when he has finished his bowl of rice, and has a sublime indifference to trade, profits, and cheating when his rice time comes.

Brace Up

You are feeling depressed, your appetite is poor, you are bothered with Headache, you are fidgetty, nervous, and generally out of sorts, and want to brace up. Brace up, but not with stimulants, spring medicines, or bitters, which have for their basis very cheap, bad whiskey, and which stimulate you for an hour, and then leave you in worse condition than before. What you want is an allarative that will purify your blood, start healthy action of Liver and Kidneys, restore your vitality, and give renewed health and strength. Such a medicine you will find in Electric Bitters, and only 50 cents a bottle at

What a Girl Accomplished.

A young gril who lived eight miles from Springfield, Mass., anxious to help herself, and with no talent for teaching and a decided objection for sewing, hit upon a plan that has given her a bank account of respectable dimensions. Her next door neighbor is a dairyman and makes much butter. She made arrangements to ttake all his sour milk at a low figure. This she made into pot cheese—or Dutch cheese, as it is sometimes called. She made it into small and attractive pats, which she took into town and sold for 5 cents a pat. Every morning, from April to October, she drove in with the family horse, her market wagon loaded with shallow pans full of cheese. Her wares sold readily, and the girl is worth several thousand dollars.

Puzzled.

Written language has always been a very mysterious thing to the savages when they first became aware of its existence.

Sir John Lubbock, in writing of the savages of South America, says that on one occasion a native was sent by a missionary to a friend with a note and four loaves of bread.

The native ate one on the way, and was amazed to find that the note discovered his theft. On the next occasion that he was sent with four, he sat on the note while eating one of them. In North America writing was considered a charm.

Surprised and delighted.—Mr. J. R Ritter, Manager of the Cleveland Aniline Works need not have been surprised that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup should have done for him what it has under similar conditions done for myriads of others. Surprise to us it would have been if it had not cured his cold. But when he tells us that his rest and sleep had been greatly disturbed by a severe cold and cough, and that the "old reliable" stopped the cough in two hours and procured him a beautiful night's rest, we do not wonder, that he should have been delighted. Ah! it has brought delight to many a household before it was tried by Mr. J. R. Ritter. And that is why we say that no household be without it. These lines were taken from Mr. Ritter's letter:

"A fortnight ago I caught a severe cold, my chest was sore, and I coughed incessantly, which troubled my rest and sleep for many a night. Yesterday it was especially troublesome and for the first time in my life I tried Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, which to my great surprise and delight stopped the cough within two hours and procured me a beautiful night's rest. Thankfully yours, J. R. RITTER Mang'r. Cleveland, O. Aniline Works.

The reason why Acker's Blood Elixir is warranted, is because it is the best Blood Preparation known. It will positively cure all Blood Diseases, purifies the whole system, and thoroughly builds up the constitution. Remember, we guarantee it.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

EBENEZER POWERFUL WEAK.

Luxurious Breakfast—Squalid Villages and Dirty Indians—Sarah Bernhardt-dino—Impositions Upon the Public by the Railroad Companies.

SARAH BERNHARDT-DINO, Ap'l 25, '88.

"Mr. Orton, dis am mighty hard work turning dis-ere crank; I am getin' powerful weak; and unless I feel a heap better soon I'll have to drop off on de first mountain," exclaimed Eb. after we had risen perpendicularly into the air half a mile, and been bowling along for two hours in a direct line from El Paso towards Los Angeles. We were running nearly into the teeth of the wind which made the crank turn harder than it would have done with either a free or beam wind. "Golly, almost wish I hadn't agreed to come, for picking cottin ain't a circumstance compared to dis kind of work." "Take it easy, Eb., said I, for all we care to do is to beat the record of the Chicago & Alton "Limited," and you can do that and lay half your time on the crank; besides, the clouds look as though the the wind might change, and then, perhaps, you will have to turn the crank backwards to keep from going too fast."

The panorama below was exceedingly tame, the earth dry, treeless, and almost grassless, with a lazy stream running through the barren plains, about which cows and cowboys huddled, looked no larger than musk rats. The broad-brimmed hats worn by the boys looked no larger than silver dollars, and the trains of cars as they passed under us resembled snakes dragging themselves along, as if half asleep. Night coming on, the wind went down with the sun, and as Eb. had worn a large blister on each hand, we decided to take in sail, sung up for the night, "all turn in," and let the Pegasus lay to until morning. About four o'clock we heard Eb. gasping for breath, he having slept in the baloon leaning on the crank. As soon as the wheel had stopped the night before the Pegasus began to rise steadily until by the time mentioned we had risen where the air was so rarified that the poor darky could scarcely breathe.

"UP WITH THE PROPELLER FAN," and turn for your life!" I shouted from below, at the same time running up the rope ladder into the baloon. With their combined efforts, almost superhuman, we soon brought the baloon down again within half a mile of the ground, where we could all breathe comfortably, when Eb. fell back almost exhausted, exclaiming, "Well, dat's nearer Heben dan I ever expected to git." By this time we were all so thoroughly awakened, and as dawn was beginning to break on the eastern horizon, Eb. asked the privilege of going down into the life-boat and cooking breakfast, while Mrs. O. and I kept the baloon in position by slowly turning the crank and attending the wheel. But little more than half an hour elapsed before we heard a chuckle, peculiar to the negro race, and looking down, saw a set of teeth as white as any ivory ever brot from the jungles of India, and close behind them Eb. bearing on his left palm a tray containing many delicacies, among which were delicious tenderloin steaks, coffee, a nectar fit for the gods, scrambled eggs and birds on toast, which we had caught the day before in a scrap net, while they (the birds) were flying too near us for their own safety.

Thus hour after hour passed on, we seeing but little of interest above and absolutely nothing below, except a barren waste, and an occasional squalid village, its houses looking like gobs of mud dropped from the clouds, without regard to positions, surrounded by dirty Indians and burros, about forty inches high, the veritable scriptural ass, i. e. the burros, which were cleaner, and decenter than the Indians and doubtless more intelligent.

About the close of the sixty-sixth hour after leaving El Paso we were immediately over San Bernardino. To memorize associate it with Sarah Bernhardt and stick a pin in the end. Giving the valve cord a sudden jerk the gas rushed out with a whizz and we quickly descended, landing in the dead centre of the town, within a stone's throw of the court house. As soon as we touched the ground Ebenezer heaved a sigh of relief, saying "Well, Mr. Orton, I am mighty glad I come dis time, but you can't get dis chile to go in no such machine agin."

Eb. having left us, we would be obliged to turn the crank ourselves, so we traded the Pegasus for an orange grove, having our pick out of a dozen or more, whose owners had found out after all, that an orange grove is not a bonanza.

San Bernardino, like nearly all towns in southern California, is brand new and expects, like most of them, one day to be a great city, but I am inclined to think, judging from the prices already placed on real estate, that many of those who buy will get badly left if they hold on too long, as purchasers of the watered Western Union stock have done many times. The city is beautifully located in a valley by the same name, nestled in one of nature's grandest amphitheatres. The temperature is very uniform, the thermometer never having been known to go below 30 degrees nor above 100. The air is dry and the hot days are not oppressive, while the nights are delightfully cool. The fact the Jesuit fathers selected the present site of this little city for their habitation is evidence of its adaptability for growing all the various fruits, grains and nuts, among which are hay, barley, wheat, corn, oats, oranges, lemons bananas, apples, peaches, pears, figs, limes, almons, filberts, pecans, etc. When the San Bernardinians have worked off a little of their high pressure steam it will no doubt be a good place for people wishing to invest, but at the present time my advice is "don't," for they are positively running mad with excitement and expectation.

FRANKLIN FACTS.

The Franklin Union Literary and Lyceum met at the home of G. W. Allen, on April 28th. Their pleasant rooms were filled with a large and appreciative audience.

After voting to retain the present officers during the summer, and transacting the usual business, the following programme was presented:

Inst. music—Hattie Updyke and Ed. Spaulding.
Essay, American Scenery—Bertha Taylor.
Dialogue—G. W. and J. S. Allen.
Recitation—Bertie Davenport.
Recitation—Harry Marshall.
Music—Hudson Davenport, Hollis Taylor.
Song, Quaker Courtship—Inez and Wilfred Allen.
Select reading, The Owl Critic—Minnie Wisner.
Inst. Solo—Miss Hattie Updyke.
Dia.—Alma Whelan, Annie Allen.
Chip Basket—Alton Whelan.
Song—Misses Taylor and Updyke and E. Spaulding.
Dia.—Carl Wisner, Leon Allen.
Rec. Genevra—Anna Allen.
Song—Wilfred Allen.
Dia.—The Flower of the Family.
A. B. Wisner, Rena and Anna Allen, Ed. Spaulding.
Query Box.

The exercises were all well rendered and warmly applauded, especially those of little Wilfred Allen whose personification of the quaker wooer was too comical for anything. Master Wilfred is a boy of rare talent in speaking and acting; and adds to this a voice clear and sweet and an enunciation so distinct that every syllable he utters is understood, a rare thing in one of his tender age and a very good thing indeed at any age.

The society adjourned to meet at the residence of A. D. Hunt the last Saturday night in May, with the following program:

Music Simmons and Davenport.
Rec.—Rena Allen.
Song—Wilfred Allen.
Dia.—Edith Spaulding and others.
Rec.—Ella Munger.
Dec.—Y. S. Allen.
Rec.—Grace Wisner.
Paper—Anna Allen and Alma Whelan.
Rec.—Grace Wisner.
Dec.—Carl Wisner.
Rec.—Mrs. Watson Hunt.
Music.—E Spaulding and Hattie Updyke.
Rec.—Addie Lankin.
Essay.—Minnie Wisner.
Dia.—Mrs. A. B. Wisner and others.
Poem.—Mrs. L. E. Taylor.
Music.—Taylor and Mc. Collum.

Miss. Wirts of the Center school is from Clayton not Adrian as we wrongly stated in our last.

Mrs. George Allen is no better.

Mrs. Joseph Herbison is quite ill, not seriously it is hoped.

THE NEW CHIEF JUSTICE.

MELVILLE WESTON FULLER.

Melville Weston Fuller, nominated by the president for justice of the United States supreme court, vice Waite, deceased, was born in Augusta, Me., on Feb. 11, 1833. His father was Frederick A. Fuller; his mother Catherine Weston, daughter of Chief Justice Nathan Weston. Melville W. fitted for college in Augusta, and graduated at Bowdoin in the class of 1853, his classmate being E. J. Phelps, minister to England. Mr. Fuller, after leaving college, began the study of law in the office of his uncle, George Melville Weston, at Bangor. After attending lectures in the law department of Harvard university he began the practice of his profession in Augusta in 1856. While waiting for clients he acted as editor of the Age, and won his spurs in journalism. Feeling that his true field of work was the law, and realizing that his native city did not afford that scope for effort which he stood in need of, Mr. Fuller came west and selected Chicago. Here he did not have to wait long for practice. His ability was speedily recognized and properly rewarded. For 30 years he has enjoyed a lucrative practice, and has won distinction among the foremost at this bar. In 1861 he was elected a member of the state constitutional convention. In 1862 he was chosen to the legislature, and, although a democrat running each time in a strong republican district, he was victorious by large majorities. He was a delegate to the democratic national conventions of 1864, 1872, 1876 and 1880. In 1880, when he had been in Chicago only about three years, he was selected by the citizens to deliver the address of welcome to Stephen A. Douglas. It was an eloquent, scholarly and brilliant effort. In 1858 Mr. Fuller married Calista O. Reynolds, and, after her decease, Mary Ellen, daughter of the distinguished banker, William F. Coolbaugh. He has eight daughters. Mr. Fuller's most prominent traits of character are uncompromising integrity, devotion to the interests of his clients, industry for the sake of the pleasure there is in labor, love of family and home, a heart and a hand ever ready to respond to the claims of friendship.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAY 3, 1888

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Ben Garlinghouse went to Adrian this morning.

Elmer Putnam, of Adrian, was in town yesterday.

Theodore Crane went to Toledo Saturday on business.

Edgar Ide, of Detroit, came out last Tuesday to attend the May party.

Charlie Cummins arrived in town last Monday and will stay a few days.

Snell & Wallinger, I. P. Keyser and Hand closed their saloons last Tuesday.

Miss Ella Swift, of Clinton, was the guest of Miss Hattie Whittier, Friday and Saturday.

Dr. Stewart is demolishing the old house on Chicago street and will soon begin erecting the new.

The ice cream season was properly opened last Saturday in Tecumseh at Marsden's and VanAntwerp's.

Mrs. Gray and son, of Kirwin, Kansas, arrived in town on Monday. Mrs. Gray expects to remain here about a year.

Mrs. Jane Wheeler, who has been spending the past winter with her son Frank, at Twin Lake, returned to her home Tuesday.

Several of our brick mason's have gone to Jackson to build a fine brick residence for Hugh Richards, formerly of this place.

Walter Fowler and Mr. Moffet, came over from Ann Arbor last Saturday on their tricycle, and were guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Orr over Sunday.

Great bargain in fine suit bed room furniture, patent family fruit dryer, and one 2nd hand sewing machine, if applied for at once. G. P. SPARKS.

John Johnson and J. Hendershot celebrated the first of May by imbibing a little too much of "oh-be-joyful," and were locked up in the cooler to sober off.

Ice cream and cake at the parlors of the Presbyterian church, Friday evening. Served by the Young People's Society. Everybody invited. Cream 10c, and cake 5c.

Mr. L. Miller and wife, of Lodi, N. Y., are visiting at A. K. Waldron's and will spend some time calling on friends in the vicinity of Tecumseh and Ridgeway.

Will Whiting returned from Pratt, Kan., last Monday and will remain a few weeks. He has sold his interest in the cigar business there to his partner, Grant Hanford.

Fred Slocum, of the Tuscola County Advertiser is organizing a Printer's Specimen Exchange for Michigan This is an excellent idea and brother Slocum is just the man to push it to success.

Meeting of the W. C. T. U. at the usual time and place. We hope to have a report from the delegates to the District Convention just held, besides a short program for the mothers. Some important business items will also claim our attention.

There will be a meeting at the HERALD office, May 5th, at 2 o'clock, of the executive committee of Farmer's Union picnic, of Northern Lenawee, together with the program committee and the committee on place etc., to complete arrangements for the picnic.

A suit between G. W. Griffith and Ed. Rowland last week before Justice Burridge attracted considerable attention. It was tried before a jury consisting of Jehiel Davidson, B. C. Knapp, Chas. Skinner, Geo. Heesen, Joe Wooden and Wm. Totten. The claim was for back wages and the jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff of $128.

One of the plate glass windows in the front of our office met with an accident on Monday which badly demoralized it. As usually happens in such cases "nobody did it," but a sixty dollar window pane was shivered into atoms just the same. Fortunately for us the front was insured, and the company will put in a new window very soon.

The selection of Melville W. Fuller for chief justice of the supreme court was another of Mr. Cleveland's surprises, which happily pleases the people. Republicans and Democrats alike have only words of praise for the appointee, and no objection can be raised when the question of confirmation comes before the senate. Illinois is especially pleased with the selection. Mr. Cleveland is making no mistakes in these days of business and politics.

The Art Amateur for May contains a striking colored portrait study of a "Laughing Man," three quarters size, and over a dozen designs in black and white, including a classical figure of "Fame," plate decorations (fish and seaweed, Niphetos roses), a panel decoration (fringed gentians), a plaque design (birds and deers), a page of monograms (or six designs for doilies, and several for wood carving. Price 35 cents. Montague Marks, Publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

Hand's ice wagon has begun its daily round.

Is Tecumseh going to celebrate Decoration Day?

Albert Hyde Jr., is treating his [illegible]

Misses Allie Angel and May Fee, of Adrian, were guests of Mrs. John J. Orr over Sunday.

Tom McClure goes to Flat Rock again to-morrow to take in a leap year May party.

School at Raisin Valley Seminary will close Saturday to allow students to attend the Lenawee County Teacher's Association.

S. Whittier has bought the place owned by G. P. Sparks on the corner of Logan and Maumee streets. He expects to move in his new home this week.

Tansley Bros. are working up a fine business in their cigar box factory. They have taken several new brands during the past month to manufacture regularly.

We have received the current catalogue of the Michigan Mining School located at Houghton. This is the second year of the school and it is already firmly established.

Bud Hall, a "colored gemmen," of Tecumseh, was engaged in a stabbing affray up at Hudson last week. Hall was pretty badly knifed, but the indications now are that he will recover.

Prof. R. Hudson, of the University, visits Raisin Valley Seminary to-morrow, for the purpose of inspecting the work done. Seminary graduates are allowed to enter Ann Arbor without examination.

We are indebted to the Detroit Music Company for a copy of Gen. Alger's March, composed by Harry R. Williams. It has a fine musical jingle and coming out just at this time, it should have an extended sale.

The spring term at Raisin Valley Seminary progresses finely. There is an increase of thirty per cent over last year, making the largest enrollment in several years. A normal class of twenty members has been organized.

John U. Harkness, at present the superintendent of Earlham College, Richmond, Ind., made his friends at Raisin Valley a short visit the first of the week. Mr. H. is looking finely and reports everything progressing nicely at Earlham.

We are indebted to Frank Potter for a copy of the last catalogue of the State University. We notice his name among those who graduate next June in the Literary Department. Also that of Bert Hause among the Dental school graduates.

The publishers are now delivering the Biographical Album of Lenawee Co. through this section. We have carefully examined our copy which we received last week and regard it as a work of much value. The book is elegantly printed and bound, and extra pains have been taken to have the biographical sketches accurate. The short biographies of the Presidents and Governors of Michigan will add much to its value.

Andrew Carson, the 15 year old son of Trackmaster Carson, of the M. & O. division of the Cincinnati, Jackson & Mackinaw railroad, was instantly killed last Friday afternoon, near Onsted, by being thrown from a team owned by Samuel Morey. Andrew was driving over a bridge, when several lads, who were under it, made a noise, and frightened the team so that they ran away, threw the boy out, and ran over his head, mashing it into a jelly, and death was instantaneous. The boy only entered Mr. Morey's employ Monday morning.

In our account of the Kolklesch—Campbell wedding as published last week, the list of presents was inaccurate. We give the list again correctly.

Water set and lamp—Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Mellon.

Linen table cloth and one dozen napkins—Miss Albertine Brewer.

Future china set—Will Anderson.

One toilet set—Albert Kolklesch, brother of groom.

The May Magazine of American History is filled with good things. Its frontispiece is an elegant and life like portrait of the late Alfred S. Barnes, and its opening paper a sketch of his interesting career by the editor, who gives a graphic account of the way in which he founded his great school book publishing house in 1838, bridging the whole half century since with glimpses here and there of his work and its character, his progress and his success, attended with admirably executed illustrations of his several beautiful homes. It is a story with a moral which every young man in America might read and consider to advantage. The several departments of this valuable publication form a small compendium of history in themselves. Price $5.00 a year. Published at 743 Broadway, New York.

THE MAY PARTY.

The second annual May party under the auspices of the Tecumseh Bicycle Club was one of the most enjoyable social events that Tecumseh has seen in many a day. The young men who had the affair in charge, resolved at the outset to make a success of it, at all hazards, and socially considered it more than met their expectations. The Opera House was beautifully decorated for the occasion. Bicycles were suspended along the gallery front, curtains were hung at the windows, chinese lanterns were properly displayed, and the row boat "Ino" was placed on the platform, with sail spread, on which appeared in large red letters the initials "T. A. A." Festoons were hung from a wire in the center to the four corners of the room and the front of the platform was hidden by drapery, evergreens and flowers. The decorations were elaborate and exceedingly tasty. The committee are indebted to Anderson & Co. for material loaned. The concert before the dance was short but well worth the admission fee. The orchestra furnished two selections, Miss Florence Rice, of Brooklyn, a beautiful song, and Miss Mabel Hayden a fine violin solo. The grand march was led by Rudolph and Miss Hannah Heesen assisted by about thirty couple. Wolfe's orchestra were at their best and the music from first to last was superb. Nearly forty couples participated in the dance during the evening, and the program was carried out substantially as given on the cards of invitation. Refreshments were served at Armory Hall by R. C. Van Antwerp. There were enough covers to accommodate the entire company at one sitting, and the menu added to Van's prior reputation in that line. The company was confined mostly to the younger class of society and there were several guests present from abroad. Financially the affair was not a bonanza for the committee, as they had to put up a small margin to liquidate the expenses, but in every other particular it was an unqualified success. As the Tecumseh B. Club seems to be a fixed institution now we shall expect to see these merry May parties continued from year to year.

CAMBRIDGE SHEEP BREEDERS.

They Held a Shearing Festival at C. W. Greenleaf's Farm on Tuesday Last.

been noted for raising fine wool sheep, and their reputation does not deteriorate in the least. Each year the standard is kept up, and increased if possible. The principal breed seems to be Merino and the clips taken from their back cannot be surpassed either in weight or quality.

The annual shearing festival of the Cambridge Sheep Breeders and Wool Growers' Association was held last Tuesday at the farm of Chas. W. Greenleaf about one half mile south of Ousted village. The day was unusually cold for the first of May, a raw wind prevailing continually with a cloudy sky; consequently the attendance was light. Many farmers preferred not to expose their sheep to the cold blast by taking off their fleece and did not bring them. However about 40 ewes and bucks were on exhibition in Mr. Greenleaf's spacious barn and made a fine showing.

Frank Sheeler showed eleven ewes—four of them 2 years old and the remainder yearlings; also seven 2 year old bucks. All of them were bred from the ram, "Old Rip VanWinkle," are registered, and as fine sheep as can be found in the state of that breed. Mr. Sheeler takes great interest in sheep breeding and his flocks stand in the front rank.

William Wimple had on exhibition four ewes and five bucks coming 2 yrs. old which excited general admiration from those present and were certainly worthy of all that could be said of them.

Asa Draper's pen contained three bucks and six ewes—three with lambs, which were all up to the standard.

John Bennett—one 4 year old ram weighing 165 pounds.

Wilson Neeley, of Woodstock, had three ewes of the Old Rip stock.

After dinner the business of shearing began, but on account of the weather only seven were shorn as per the following table.

NAME.	Sex.	Age.	Wt. of Carcass.	Wt. of Fleece.
			lbs.	lbs
Frank Sheeler	E	2	87	22

The accommodations of Mr. Greenleaf were of the best and the festival passed off in the usual pleasant manner, including, of course, the dinner served by the hostess.

OF IMPORTANCE TO DRUGGISTS.

And Such Persons as Contemplate Engaging in the Drug Business in Michigan.

Act No. 134, Laws of 1885, Amended 1887, entitled "An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy in the State of Michigan," requires that every pharmacy or drug store must be in charge of a registered pharmacist; that no drugs, medicines or poisons can be sold or prescriptions compounded except by a registered pharmacist or a registered assistant pharmacist, or under the personal supervision of a registered pharmacist. A registered assistant pharmacist can not supervise or manage a store; he can do a certain work himself but he cannot supervise any one else. He may be allowed to remain in charge of a pharmacy during those temporary absences of the registered pharmacist in charge of such pharmacy which are incidental to any business. Therefore a registered pharmacist must be in charge of every drug store or store of any description where drugs, medicines and poisons, within the meaning of that Act, are sold. Having a registered pharmacist's certificate hanging up in the store does not answer the requirement, the registered pharmacist must be actually in charge.

Any person not a registered pharmacist, within the meaning of that Act, contemplating starting or purchasing a drug store, or of adding a line of drugs to a general store, must employ and place in personal charge a registered pharmacist. Such proprietor can not compound Physician's Prescription or sell drugs, medicines and poisons, in the absence of the registered pharmacist in charge, except a few articles allowed to be sold by any one, under Section 10 of said Law.

In case of violation of the Law, if complaint is made, it becomes obligatory upon the Board to investigate the case, and if such case is based upon facts, to prosecute the offender. For this purpose they employ an attorney, who has been very successful in securing convictions. Out of thirteen cases tried since August 1st, 1887, he has secured seven convictions one case was lost on a count of a defect in the complaint and the other case by reason of an unreliable witness.

The Board propose to see the law enforced and take this method of informing the public of the fact and also as a warning to those who may now be violating the Law or may intend to violate the law hereafter, that they will be prosecuted if such violation comes to the knowledge of the Board. It is the moral duty of every Registered Pharmacist in the State to notify the Board of violations. Such complaint should be filed with the Secretary, duly signed by the person cognisant of the fact. Notifications receive any attention. The person giving the information will not be required to take any part in the prosecution, or be known in the case, but we desire the name so as to know that it is a bona fide complaint. We do not desire to do any person an injury, but intend that all must live up to the Law.

The Board meet upon the first Tuesday of March, July and November of each year for the purpose of examining candidates for registration. Do not engage in the drug business until registered as required by law; a failure to pass may leave you with a stock of goods on hand that you can not sell at retail yourself. In such case you must place a registered pharmacist in charge at once.

Copies of the Law and such other information as may be desired can be secured by addressing the Secretary.

THE OLD HOUSEHOLD CLOCK.

"Of the old, old clock, of the household stock,
Was the brightest thing and neatest:
Its hands, though old, had a touch of gold,
And its chime rang still the sweetest.
'Twas a monitor, too, though its words were few,
Yet they live, though nations altered:
When the voice of friendship faltered,
'Tick! tock!' it said 'quick, quick to bed,
For ten I've given a warning;
Cock! crow! and go, or else you know
You'll never rise soon in the morning!'

"A friendly voice was that old, old clock
As it stood in the corner smiling;
And bless the time with a merry chime,
The whirly hours beguiling.
But a cross old voice was that tirsome clock,
As it called at daybreak boldly,
When the dawn lay asleep upon the misty way,
And the early air blew coldly.
'Tick! tick!' it said 'quick out of bed,
For five I've given warning.
You'll never have health, you'll never have wealth,
Unless you're up soon in the morning!'

"Still hourly the sound goes round and round
With a tone that ceases never,
While tears are shed for bright days fled,
And the old friends lost forever.
Its heart beats on—though hearts are gone,
Its hands still move—though hands we love
Are clasped on earth no longer.
'Tick! tock!' it said—to the churchyard bed,
The grave oft times gives warning.
Up! up! and rise, and look at the skies,
And prepare for a heavenly morning!'"

THE LITTLE DRUMMER.

It was a scorching hot July day in Algiers. Under that fiery sky, where white dazzles, yellow gleams like molten gold, and the reds blind by excess of light, a spot of shade is like a cool oasis in this oven of heat and color.

Colonel Prosper Hautecourt saw this, as he passed groups of yawning French soldiers on his way to a clump of trees growing on a slight elevation, where there was at least a promise of some breeze. When he reached the spot, he saw a lad lying asleep under the trees, with his right arm thrown around a drum which lay beside him.

"Ha, Jules, what dost thou here?" cried the colonel.

The boy sprang up instantly. A delicate stripling he was, with a pale face, but bright, intelligent eyes.

"I believe I was half asleep, mon colonel," he said, with a laugh. "We had a sharp time last night with the Arabs, you know, and the men somehow scattered. I beat my drum till my arms were numb. I lay down in camp, but, ouf! it was a hot oven."

Colonel Hautecourt smiled kindly at the lad, but the next moment his face clouded.

"I have wished to speak to thee, Jules, for some time," he said. "Sit down here and answer me. Dost thou know I have heard strange stories in camp about thee. The men say that in action thou art one of them who is so frightened that he almost loses his senses, that he crouches behind his brave comrades, and when he beats the drum, the strokes are so tremulous that it sounds more like a shameful retreat than a gallant charge. Dost thou know who the coward is, Jules?"

As the Colonel spoke the boy's head had sunk lower and lower, till his face was hidden. As he raised it to answer the officer it was white as death, and his lips quivered.

"I suppose they mean me, Mon Colonel," he answered.

"Yes, they mean thee, my poor boy! Look here, Jules. I have known thee from an infant in La Vendee. Thy good, honest father would die with shame if thou should disgrace him, and a coward is a disgrace, not only to his family, but to his country. A Vendean and a coward! Bah! they do not go together. I warn thee that all my influence can not go far where any infraction of military discipline is concerned. I have done my best, but thou art getting to be a by-word among the men."

"Look here, Mon Colonel!" the boy said, a faint flush creeping into his pale cheek. "I am not always afraid. Sometimes I feel as bold as a lion, but then another time I don't know what comes to me. My hands and feet get as cold as ice. I tremble, my eyes are dim, and when I see my comrades falling right and left, something tells me to run away; but I have never run, no, never!" he added with spirit.

"Not yet," Col. Hautecourt said sadly; "but some day that cowardice, which thou callest something, will lead thee to kneel on thy coffin, and have a tile of thy Zouave comrades shoot thee through the heart. A coward is a traitor."

The boy shuddered, but did not speak.

"Why didst thou beg so hard to be allowed to become a drummer in the army, if thy courage is so uncertain?" asked the Colonel.

"My father is poor, as you know, Mon Colonel—bad harvests and sickness in the family. And I wanted to come, it was so grand to fight for France, and I could beat the drum well even then. Oh, I love my drum!" caressing it. "It talks to me like a living voice.

"Let it tell you, then, 'Be brave!' my boy. Don't disgrace yourself and La Vendee any more," the Colonel said.

The boy started to his feet, and his eyes brightened.

"Do not fear, Mon Colonel! I tell you I am no coward, though I seem so sometimes. It is bodily weakness only, and I will die before it shall conquer me again."

But the Colonel, as he walked thoughtfully toward his tent, did not share in the boy's confidence. The father of Jules was a farmer on the Beauvoir estate, of which the Marquis d' Hautecourt, his own father, was the owner. He had always been fond of Jules, and his timidity as a child used to amuse him, but when he came under his command as a soldier, he found the boy's weakness furnished occasion for the gravest fears.

"I must get his discharge" upon some pretext, the Colonel thought. "That boy, in one of his panics, is sure to desert, and then no power can save him. It would be terrible to see him shot in that way, and as sure as I am here, that will be his fate. But what can I do, with such thoughts? Here to-day, gone to-morrow, and, before it lies behind me, I may be lying on the desert sands, pierced through and through by an Arab sabre."

It was some time after that before the next encounter with the "Sons of the Desert." A portion of the French army had taken up in some Arab stronghold, and had met with a hard day's fighting. The march had been a hot and toilsome one, and the soldiers were utterly exhausted.

"We must have rest to-night," said Gen. Beaupre. "The Arabs will not venture to come near us again for many a day. The dogs have got their lesson now, from a to z, and they will leave carrion enough behind them to feed an army of buzzards. Oh, no danger from them."

Col. Hautecourt shook his head.

"I have been in this country many years," he said, "and I have seen strange things. You have fought and whipped the enemy. You look around the desert horizon, miles and miles distant, and you see not a speck, but in a minute, as if it rose from the earth, an army is upon you, and you hear that shrill 'Allah' from north, south, east, and west, till your ears are deafened."

"The soldiers must rest," Gen. Beaupre replied. "We cannot [illegible] position left in these shattered walls, but post sentries at every weak point. I have no fear of an attack to-night, or before we leave here."

It was a black, starless night, the moaning of the wind as it swept over the desert sand, and the cloudier skies, betokened one of those fierce tempests, which sometimes visit the African coast. Jules, with his love of the outer air, had laid himself down near one of the breaches in the dismantled wall, before which a sentinel was monotonously pacing. The cool greensward was pleasant to the boy's heated cheek, and, as he lay there, he thought over the events of the day.

He had been frightened, oh, horribly frightened, when the fighting began, but he remembered what his colonel had said to him, about his drum having a voice. And then his arm grew stronger, and his drum seemed to say to him, "Be brave, Jules! Shame on a coward!"

All at once the fear left him, and he felt as bold as any of his comrades. And it was his dear drum's doing.

As Jules thought that, he drew his drum toward him and actually hugged and kissed it. Perhaps there was a good spirit in it. The Vendeans have many superstitions, and among them the existence of good or evil spirits in inanimate objects, and as far as superstition went Jules was a true peasant of La Vendee.

Then his thoughts took him back home. He saw the interior of the cottage; his father smoking his pipe, his mother mending by the firelight, his brother, "grand Jean," coming in from stable and cowyard, and Pierre and little Louise playing on the wide hearth. Yes, they were all there but himself, and he could see his mother's eyes full of sadness for her poor little soldier-boy.

He closed his eyes, for tears were streaming down his cheeks.

He was startled by a strange, muffled sound just outside the breach in the wall. He raised himself on his elbow and looked out, but he could no longer distinguish the figure of the sentry pacing his round. There was not much light, though the clouds were dispersing, but, as he strained his eyes through the gloom, he could make out several dusky figures stealing through the breach, and with a quick heart-throb he understood that the sentry had been killed, and the Arabs would surprise the camp.

If he uttered a cry it would be too feeble to be heard by those heavy sleepers, and it would bring the Arabs upon him in a second.

Again the old panic seized him, and he crouched down in the long grass and weeds. When the Arabs had passed him it would be easy enough to make his escape and rejoin the main army, he thought; but then, could he, a French soldier, fly and leave his comrades to be massacred without an attempt to warn them?

Numberless dark forms glided swiftly by him. In a few moments they would be upon the sleepers.

Suddenly his Colonel's words came back to him, "A coward is a traitor?" Ah, never shall he say that of Jules! He must die! Farewell mother, father, brothers and sisters, but he will not die a coward!

With a firm hand he drew his drum toward him, and then upon the silence of the night pealed forth the warning roll. He beat his drum madly, fiercely, with the strength of ten men, but all at once it ceased, for an Arab lance had pierced the little drummer's heart.

But the work was done. The alarm had been given in time, and the Arabs found no sleeping foe to massacre. The fight was a fierce but a short one, and as usual the French were victorious.

"Where is Jules?" asked Col. Hautecourt, eagerly. "That boy has been our salvation. Ciel! how the little fellow did beat that drum! It sounded in my ears like the last trump."

"It was the last trump to him, Mon Colonel, said one of the soldiers, "though it did save us. We found him dead on one side of the breach where the savages entered, his hand on his drum. It was easy to read, that story was. He saw the Arabs steal in, and the only way to warn was by the drum. He beat it though he knew he was beating his own dirge. Ah, he was brave, our little drummer!"

Col. Hautecourt turned aside, for daring soldier as he was, he did not choose his men should see tears in his eyes.

In his native village you may still hear the story how the little drummer boy saved the camp. Col. Hautecourt erected a memorial pillar to him in the village square, telling, in few words, how and where he died, and, while they lived, the old father and mother would gaze at it with dim eye; it seemed to them a message from the dead.

It was as if he said, "Weep not, for it is glorious to die as I did, to save others."

Good Investments.

The original investors in Bell Telephone stock are considered fortunate because the value of it has increased ten fold. It was, no doubt, a very pleasant surprise to them, but they could not express their satisfaction in more earnest words than do the purchasers of "Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense" hundreds of whom write that it is worth from ten to one hundred times its cost. An editor writes: "It contains more of value than any book on my shelves." A physician writes: "It is without doubt the best and most interesting book I ever consulted." Here is a chance to invest $1.50 for something that you will soon find will rise in value, and be worth many times its cost. It is especially interesting to those just married or about to be, and to persons "who enjoy poor health." Contents, table free. Murray Hill Publishing Company, 129 East 28th Street, New York.

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris, Tex., by the remarkble recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley, who was so helpless he could not turn in bed, or raise his head; everybody said he was dying of Consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief, he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of Pills and two bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six pounds.

A REMARKABLE CASE.—Doctors gave her up as incurable and her jaw bone must be removed, but is saved by the use of Steketee's Neuralgia Drops. The undersigned herewith wishes to say what a remarkable cure Steketee's Neuralgia Drops done in curing the unexpired of neuralgia. I had been troubled with pain in my jaw for a long time. I employed a skillful physician in this city. He decided that my case was incurable unless my jaw bone was removed. I called on Mr. Steketee for advice. He advised after having examined my case to use his Neuralgia Drops. The result of using one half bottle of said Neuralgia Drops entirely cured me, and without the use of a knife or violence.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, on the 11th day of October, 1883, Samuel W. Temple mortgaged to Addison Hardenburg, all that parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, in the county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point in the east line of Pearl street ten (10) rods south of the north line of Shawnee street, running thence eastwardly parallel with and ten (10) rods distant from said north line about ten (10) rods to the Railway Depot Grounds; thence northward on west line of said Depot Grounds about six (6) rods to lands of Heesen Brothers and Nyland; thence west on south line of said land of Heesen Brothers and Nyland two (2) rods more or less to land conveyed by said Samuel W. Temple and wife, Hettie A. to Edwin Woodhull; thence south on east line of said land so as aforesaid conveyed to said Wood two and one-half (2½) rods to the southeast corner thereof; thence west on south line of said parcel of land so as aforesaid conveyed to said Wood eight (8) rods to the east line of Pearl street; thence south on east line of said Pearl street to the place of beginning, with all the appurtenances thereto belonging or in anywise appertaining or thereupon situated, including the machinery in and about the buildings thereon or to be hereafter annexed to the same or any part thereof, to secure the payment of $258.00 in five years from the date thereof with interest to be paid annually at the rate of ten per cent. per annum for the first three years, and for the remaining two years interest to be paid annually at the rate of nine per cent. per annum, which mortgage was, on the 11th day of October, 1883, duly recorded in office of Register of Deeds for said County of Lenawee in Liber 93 of mortgages on page 339 and 340. And whereas said mortgage contains a provision that in event any default shall be made in the payment of said interest, or any part thereof at the time therein specified, and shall remain in arrears for the space of sixty days the aforesaid principal sum with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of said mortgagee, his executors, administrators and assigns, become due and payable. And whereas default has been made in the payment of interest on said mortgage to the amount of $5 to 60-100 and upwards and the same having remained unpaid and in arrears for a space of more than sixty days, and the undersigned, administratrix, hereby elects to declare and does hereby declare the whole amount due, both principal and interest, amounting at the date of this notice to the sum of $3180.88 100, and no proceedings having been commenced at law or in equity for the recovery of said sum or any part thereof. And whereas the undersigned administratrix has been compelled to pay the further sum of $98.37-100 for insurance premiums to protect her interest as such administratrix in the mortgaged premises.

Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and by virtue of the statutes of the State of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the moneys so due and owing on said mortgage, and the interest thereon, and from and after the date of this notice, said insurance premiums and interest thereon, as provided in said mortgage, and the cost and expense of this foreclosure, and the attorney fee provided by law; the said above described lands and premises will be sold at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of the Court House in the city of Adrian, in said County of Lenawee (that being the place where the circuit court for said county of Lenawee is holden) on Saturday, the 26th day of May, A.D. 1888, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day.

Dated March 1st, 1888.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage made and executed on the third day of June 1886, by the Ohio & Michigan Coal and Manufacturing Company to Addison Hardenburg, and recorded on the 4th day of June, 1886, in office of Register of Deeds for the County of Lenawee, Michigan, in Liber 117, of mortgages, on page 74, by virtue of which said default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas there is claimed to be due and owing at the date of this notice upon the said mortgage and note accompanying same for principal and interest the sum of $2807.50, and whereas the undersigned administratrix has been compelled to pay the further sum of $16.75, for insurance premiums to protect her interest in the mortgaged premises, and whereas no suit or proceedings at law or in equity have been instituted to recover such indebtedness secured to be paid by said mortgage nor any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and of the statutes of the State of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the monies so due and owing on said mortgage, and interest from and after the date thereof, said insurance premiums and interest thereon, and the cost and expense of this foreclosure, the attorney fee provided by law, the undersigned will sell at public vendue to the highest bidder on the 19th day of May, A.D., 1888, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the front door of the court house in the city of Adrian in said county of Lenawee, (that being the place where the circuit court for said county of Lenawee is holden) the lands and premises described in said mortgage, viz: All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, in the county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point of intersection of the north line of Shawnee street with the west line of the Jackson Branch of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad company in said village, thence north at right angles with said Shawnee street, thirty-seven (37) feet; thence northerly on westerly line of said Railroad lands to the northeast corner of a parcel of land formerly owned by Alpheus Stearns, and more recently owned by S. W. Temple; thence west on south line of Railroad depot grounds twelve rods to land formerly owned by Emma Temple; thence south on east line of said land formerly owned by said Emma Temple, as aforesaid about ten rods to the north line of Shawnee street aforesaid; thence east on north line of Shawnee street aforesaid thirteen rods and fourteen and one-half feet to place of beginning.

Dated February 24, 1888.

MORTGAGE SALE.

BY a certain mortgage bearing date the 4th day of March, A.D. 1886, executed by Charles T. Watson and Anna P. Watson, his wife, to Lewis Smith and George Ferguson, and duly recorded in the office of the register of Deeds for Lenawee county, state of Michigan on the 21st day of March, A.D., 1886, in Liber 102 of Mortgages on page 59, the said mortgage to said Lewis Smith and George Ferguson, all that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Deerfield, county of Lenawee and state of Michigan described as follows, to wit: Lot number thirty-nine (39) in Tray Factory lot, said lot being bounded as follows: on the north by Main street, on the east by Raisin street, on the south by Jason alley, on the west by lot owned by Munson; said lot now owned by Frank Dietz, together with all of the machinery belonging and in possession on said premises. Said mortgage was on the 5th day of May, A.D. 1881, duly assigned by Lewis Smith and George Ferguson to William K. Choate and said assignment was recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Lenawee county aforesaid, on the 7th day of February, A.D., 1888, in Liber 118 of Mortgages on page 236. Default has been made in the condition of said mortgage whereby the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is now claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of three hundred sixty-three and dollars $363.30, and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery has been instituted to recover the same or any part thereof. Notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgaged premises will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder on the 14th day of May, A.D., 1888, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, at the east front door of court house of said county, in the city of Adrian, in said county, said court house being the place of holding the circuit court of said county of Lenawee, to satisfy the amount then due together with all legal costs and charges of this foreclosure.

Dated Feb. 14, A.D. 1888.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schmitton, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON FOR MAY 6th, 1888.

THE JUDGMENT—MATT. XXV. 31-46.

NOTES. We ...

and this lesson inducts us into the sublime and mystical region of prophecy. In this passage are many parabolic and exceedingly dramatic symbolisms.——"In his glory."—His second coming is to be far different from his first. Then humiliation, now in the glory of his majesty as King of kings.——"All the Angels."—All angels, all nations; how great publicity!——"The goats."—These were considered worthless animals. In the 33 1 verse the Greek uses the diminutive to express further contempt.——"His right hand—the left."—See Eccles x, 2. This symbolism is most natural. The right hand points to effective, the left to ineffective action. It is a natural distinction that all nations seem to have. The right hand in Ps. xvi, 8, is a synonym of protection, while in Ps. cx, 1, "to sit on the right hand" is to occupy the place of honor. The highest use of this symbolism is made here in this passage.——"Took me in."—Received me in your family circle; were hospitable.——Verses 37, 38, 39 comprise the answer of the righteous. They go over the catalogue carefully, and then decline with humility Christ's imputation of holy conduct on the ground that they never literally did it Christ himself, and the moral values of such humble services they dare not estimate.——"Inasmuch," etc.—Christ now interprets the holy to themselves. Their faith, in spite of their ignorance, did terminate with Christ. He knew it, and revealed to them their own hearts and their higher impulses.——Now the judge turns to those who merit God's wrath and the consequences of their guilt. Having been "partakers in the guilt of demons, so now they are also condemned to share in their punishment."——In verse 44 their argument is, "we did not see thee, then how could we minister to thee? But if we had seen thee we should not have refused thee our good services." It was a repelling of what they took as an unwarranted accusation. Christ answers them briefly, and the futility of their argument becomes apparent.——"Eternal punishment."—No sophistry or popular toning down can get rid of the everlastingness of this decree. No one thinks of disputing eternal life. No process of logic can throw out of account a like period of eternal death.

INSTRUCTION.—Christ shall certainly judge every one in his own good day. This is to be a public ceremony in the sight of nations and of angels. The rewards are eternal life or eternal death. There is no middle course, no purgatory taught here. It is enough to clearly understand that Christ will judge each according to his character, and that no one can escape it. What an inspiring thought that Christ has been preparing the most blessed of all places from before eternity began. Heaven is no hastily prepared resting-place; it is the result of infinite thought and divine plan. There each will find the greatest opportunity for his peculiar activity. No one loses his ego there. The blessed of the Father shall best worship their king there by eternal growth in Christ, which is eternal life. Faith finds its highest expression in service. This lesson teaches that service, though it be done unconscious of the deep significance of in his name, is mighty for deliverance. The answering of every call for sympathy and help is a step taken toward God. Let unselfishness the great principle of Christ, be carried to its utmost, then, though Christ be unknown, the self-loser will find immortality.

Christ is not only a revealer of God to man but of man to himself. "The faithful do not estimate their good deeds, the wicked their goods, the wicked their bad as the judge does." The kindness that one does as a matter of course may meet with divine approbation because it has been really done for Christ's sake.

A great principle may not always be formulated in words but may be in character. Such are those who ignorantly and humbly serve Christ by serving others.

Prominence is laid upon the least of these. This should encourage the doing of the hard and disagreeable work in the slums of our cities and in the dirty mud-huts of the country. We can do no better work for Christ than to raise up him that is weakest in spiritual life and the least in the social scale. Service is increased in value in proportion as it is hard to perform.

There is no other reward mentioned here than life eternal. What would the crystal not give for life? What shall we not hazzard for life in an infinitely higher plane than, what the majority now have—and that eternal?

I had a severe attack of catarrh, and became so deaf I could not hear common conversation. I suffered terribly from roaring in my head. I procured a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm, and in three weeks could hear as well as I ever could, and now I can say to all who are afflicted with the worst of diseases, catarrh, take one bottle of Ely's Cream Balm and be cured. It is worth $1,000 to any man, woman or child suffering from catarrh.—A. E. Newman, Grayling, Mich.

THE CHINESE PROBLEM.

What an Americanized Chinaman Recommends To Solve It.

At a recent meeting in New York, Yan Phou Lee, a ... Chinaman ... a New Haven address, based on Chinese Sunday schools in America.

In mental culture and spiritual discernment, he said, the Chinese who came to America were children, and should be treated as such, with a little allowance for their growth. The dealings of foreign traders in China had not impressed the Chinese with a sense of the ethical code that was supposed to govern the Christian nations. But those who emigrated to America came in contact here with genuine Christians, and rapidly learned to appreciate the beauty and truth of their precepts.

Worldly motives, perhaps, actuated a majority of those who entered the Chinese Sunday schools. They were eager to learn the English language, for that knowledge improved their commercial interests; they were anxious to obtain social standing and to receive protection against the persecution which is visited upon their race more than any other in America. Once in the Sunday schools, however, they were quick to comprehend the truth of the Gospel and to embrace Christianity. Many of them would go back to China and spread the Gospel there. Some might forsake their new faith, and the best way to prevent this was to found missions in the homes of the returned Chinamen.

The Chinese language, Yan Phou Lee said, was the toughest he knew. He illustrated on the blackboard the evolution of its 40,000 characters out of the 650 radical word pictures. A circle with a horizontal diameter represented the sun and a crescent the moon. A figure that very closely resembles an American schoolboy's effort to depict a man answered the same purpose among the ancient Chinese. Yan Phou Lee drew a "lop-sided" symbol, as he termed it, and said it represented a woman. Add a broom to the picture and you had a wife. A horizontal line to represent a bolt, inserted in the symbol for a door, told you that something was "shut."

Then Yan Phou Lee drew what everybody thought was going to be a picture of a three-story house with a mansard roof. When the finishing touches were laid on, it looked as though it had passed through an experience with an earthquake. This, he said, was the written form of the longest word in the Chinese language. The word, as he spoke it, was something appalling. It meant hash.

THE MORMON CHURCH.

Our Fellow-Citizens of Utah—What They Believe.

The points of belief of the Mormon Church have been somewhat altered since first received from Joseph Smith, that teacher having taught for instance the dogma of a Trinity, while modern Mormonism holds that there is a duality of persons in the Godhead, the Holy Ghost being merely a spiritual soul. They also teach that God has parts resembling the body of man, and not materially differing from him in size.

They deny the doctrine that "all men sinned in Adam," but accept the atonement through Christ for sins committed by men. They hold that the ordinances of the Gospel are: (1), Faith in Christ; (2), Repentance; (3), Baptism by immersion for remission of sins; (4), Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

They believe that a man is called to preach by "prophecy and the laying on of hands" and claim to have the same organization in respect to teachers, that the primitive church held. They further hold a twofold priesthood, which they call the Melchisedek and the Aaronic; and they believe in a "baptism for the dead," that is, that a living person may save a dead friend by being immersed for him, unless he has committed the unpardonable sin.

They believe that the gift of tongues, revelations, visions, etc., is still granted to men, and that many things are still to be revealed concerning the kingdom of God; they claim to hold the Bible to be the word of God, "as far as it is translated correctly," also hold the Book of Mormon as the Word of God.

They further believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes, that Zion will be built upon this continent; that Christ will reign personally upon this earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisial glory.

The doctrine of polygamy was not a part of the original revelation of Mormonism, but was introduced later and came to be not simply tolerated, but enjoined as a positive duty, a man's rank in heaven being alleged to be largely dependent on the number of his children. Children are taken into the church at the age of 8, never before.

An Arrival at "the Hub."

Boston received from Africa the largest gorilla ever landed in this country. His name is Sack, and he is five feet in height when standing erect, and measures seven feet from the end of one outstretched hand to the other. He weighs about one hundred and twenty-five pounds and exhibits enormous strength, compared with which that of man seems like a child's.

He arrived in a large box made of planking two and one-half inches thick, and when being removed from the ship he tore large splinters from the hard-wood planks with as much ease as a child would break a twig.

The hair, which is very coarse, and from two to four inches in length, is of a greenish gray color, and on the back, legs and arms inclines to a black. His shoulders are immense. The expression of his face which is black, is scowling. The eyes are small, sunken in the head, and the lips large and thin. (Boston Courier.

She Gives the Bread Away.

In Wurzen, a small Slav village on the borders of Carniola, whenever there is a baptism, the nurse, on leaving the house for the church, takes a loaf of bread with her and gives it to the first person whom the party meets. He must take it whether he wants it or not.

It is said that this custom is symbolical, and that it is intended to render the child charitable.

A Model Will.

The following brief will of John A. W. Waters was filed recently: "In the name of God, amen: I, John A. W. Waters, being of sound mind and memory, but knowing the uncertainty of human life, do now make and publish this my last will and testament, that is to say, that all my property I give to my wife." NO PHYSIC WITH OUR FOOD.

A Phosphatic Baking Powder Theory that is Dangerous if not Ridiculous.

That is rather a dangerous proposi- ... of some of the patented or proprietary articles of food that their products possess a superior wholesomeness because they contain a drug of some peculiar medicinal property. Phosphates, alum, lime, arsenic, calomel, etc., have their places as specifics for different diseases, and are invaluable medical remedies; each in its place. But they are not cure-alls. The physician who should prescribe either calomel, or strychnine, or rhubarb three times a day to man, woman or child, sick or well, because either of such drugs is a well known remedy for some certain disease, would receive but little honor from the fraternity and less practice from the community.

No one will controvert this statement; yet we find manufacturers of baking powders claiming superior hygenic virtue for their productions and urging their continuous use because they are alleged to carry the phosphate used in making them (a cheap substitute for cream of tartar, procured from the bones of dead animals) into the food, although well aware, as they must be, of the fact that with the constant use of such article this drug must pass into our system daily, no matter what may be our physical conditions or requirements, or whether or not we may be suffering from some ailment wherein the use of such drug would be positively detrimental. Both alum and phosphates are useful medicaments in certain diseases; but they should no more be taken indiscriminately day after day and without the prescription of a physician, than arsenic, aconite or catomel; indeed, there are conditions of the system, particularly with women, when the prudent physician would be loath to permit the use of lime phosphates even as a medicine.

The fallacy of this claim of the manufacturers of phosphatic baking powders will be apparent to all when the fact, well known to physicians, is stated, that in average health and ordinary food the body gets more phosphates than are required or can be assimilated, as is evidenced by the fact that they are constantly being expelled in the excretions, both solid and liquid; likewise the statement that it is necessary to add phosphates to the baking powder to restore to the flour those which have been lost in the milling, for it is true that fine flour as at present made actually contains a larger precentage of phosphates than the grain of wheat itself.

The object of baking powders is not to provide the body with medicine, but simply to vesiculate or make light the mixture of flour, so as to render it when baked easy of mastication and perfectly digestible. The most celebrated experts in the business have worked for the perfection of an article that should do this mechanically, adding to or taking from the flour nothing, nor in any way effecting a change in its properties or constituents. When this has been done the leavening agent has been discovered. The manufacturers of the Royal Baking Powder have succeeded in this so far as to make a leavening agent that vesiculates and raises the loaf most perfectly, and without changing the properties of the flour, while the residuum from it has been reduced to a minimum. The acid employed, however, to produce this result is not phosphatic, but the acid of highly refined cream of tartar, which, the health authorities agree, renders that powder perfectly pure and more reliable and healthful than any other. The recent official tests show, on the other hand, that the best the phosphatic baking power makers can do is to produce an article that is one-third or more residuum or impurity.

We want our food pure; especially do we not wish to take alum, lime and phosphates with it at the dictum of manufacturers who may find it cheaper to claim a virtue for the impurities than to remove them.

A dry, hacking cough keeps the bronchial tubes in a state of constant irritation, which, if not speedily removed, may lead to bronchitis. No prompter remedy can be had than Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which is both an anodyne and expectorant.

Americans are breaking down under high pressure application to business and duties at the desk; they are losing nerve force. Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic restores lost nerve force by supplying food for the nerve tissues, and by its gentle aperative action removes all restraint from the secretive organs, hence, curing all diseases of the stomach, liver and kidneys. Dr. Geo. Ferguson will supply the genuine Red Clover Tonic at 50 cents a bottle.

White Swelling.

Mr. M. S. Handley, one of the best known insurance men in North Carolina, writes from Winston, as follows: "Ever since I was seven years of age I have had what the doctors call hip disease, and which I call white swelling. My hip was drawn out of place. There was a swelling at the knee-joint, where there is a profuse running, which has been there for years. Of course this has greatly depicted my system, together with surgical operation on the leg bone. I tried every known blood purifier to build up my system, but none did me good until I took S. S. S. I use it every spring. It always builds me up, giving me appetite and digestion, and enables me to stand the long, trying, enervating, hot summer days. To me there is no such medicine for purifying the blood and building up the wasted system as S. S. S. On using it I soon became strong of body and easy of mind. My color changed from a pale, worn look to a healthy, ruddy complexion."

Mr. G. N. Frizzel, of Farmersville, Texas, writes: "About August 1st, 1885, an eruption appeared on my arms and legs, which pained me much and seemed to affect my physical condition generally. On the advice of a physician at this place, I finally commenced using Swift's Specific. I am glad to say that after using three large bottles the sores have all healed."

Shocking Accident.

So read the headlines of many a newspaper column, and we peruse with palpitating interest the details of the catastrophe ... pressed by the sacrifice of human lives involved. Yet thousands of men and women are falling victims every year to that terrible disease, consumption (scrofula of the lungs, and they are their friends are satisfied to believe the malady incurable. Now, their could be no greater mistake. No earthly power, of course, can restore a lung that is entirely wasted, but Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will rapidly and surely arrest the ravages of consumption, if taken in time. Do not, therefore, de-pair, until you have tried this wonderful remedy.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 27, 1888.

Tariff talk is what the visitor to the galleries of the House of Representatives hears these days, and what they will continue to hear for the next two months. Debate on the tariff bill was resumed on Tuesday last, and the galleries were almost as much crowded on that day as on the day Chairman Mills opened the contest.

Surprise has been expressed that the ladies, who frequent the galleries in large numbers, should take so much interest in a subject that naturally must be dull to them, but they, like everybody else, seem to realize that the work of the session has begun and that the groundwork of the next presidential campaign is being laid.

After much disagreement in regard to the length of time the tariff debate shall be allowed to continue, the House Ways and Means Committee agreed to limit the general discussion to twenty days in all, exclusive of the night sessions, of which there will be about three a week. Four of the 20 days have already been consumed, leaving about two weeks for tariff eloquence. This gives sufficient opportunity for a full and free discussion of the subject, and both parties are satisfied with the time allotted. There is to be an equal division of the time too between the democratic and republican speakers.

Among those who have talked on the tariff bill this week are McMillin, of Tennessee, Burrows, of Michigan, Bynum and Browne, of Indiana, and Dockery, of Missouri. Messrs. McMillin and Burrows spoke for over two hours each, the former presenting the democratic side of the case, and the latter championing the cause of protection.

The Tennessee congressman's manner of delivery is not the most pleasing, but he is logical and his manner is forcible. He opened his speech with the declaration that next in importance to the question of personal liberty was the question of how and how much the people shall be taxed. As it pertains to taxation it was no new question, but was with us in the beginning of our government, and would be with us to its close. He who advocated the present tariff favored a tariff not for revenue, not for protection merely, but a tariff for surplus and a tariff for trusts.

Said he: "The internal revenue yields in round numbers one hundred and twenty millions to the government. The annual surplus is only about sixty millions; so that if all the internal revenue laws were repealed it would leave a deficiency in our taxes of sixty millions a year. What is this deficiency to be raised from? Shall we reimpose a tax on tea and coffee? No. There is not a man here who would retax coffee in order to untax whiskey. Shall we increase the duties on woolen goods, rice or sugar? No, for the people would not and should not tolerate such legislation. Then we have to select the subjects from which we will remove taxes, and in view of the fact that we cannot repeal the internal revenue system, we have to determine whether we will reduce the tax on whisky or the tax on clothing, the tax on whisky or the tax on sugar. In other words, reduce the tax on that without which men can live and prosper or upon that which is essential to their very comfort and existence, and it narrows itself down to a contest between the drunkard's belly and the poor man's back. In that fight I do not hesitate to say that I espouse the cause of the back, and defy the world, the flesh and the devil."

After analyzing the bill, Mr. McMillan said that it would reduce the revenues more than $1.25 to every individual, or $5 to every family in the United States, and he declared that the plain, simple question presented to the House was: Will we continue to hoard up a corrupting surplus, or will we leave it in the pockets of the people, where it justly belongs?

Protection was the keynote of Representative Burrows' speech, which gave great satisfaction to his republican friends. He said our tariff today is confessedly protective in that it is levied, not for revenue only, but to encourage American industry, and to protect American labor. He closed with an appeal to the new South, born of the throes of war, but now full of courage and hope, her loins girt for a new race, her heavens aglow with the break of a new day, warning her that the Mills tariff bill boded only disaster to her.

WHAT IS IT AND WHAT IT IS.

Papillon Clarke's extract of flax Skin Cure, like many other inestimable benefits to mankind, was discovered by accident. The proprietor, engaged in the preparation of certain plants, from time to time noticed the effect of working in the pulp vats on the skin. If there was present any cutaneous eruptions, warts, blemishes or scrofulous symptoms, all disappeared as if by magic. After experimenting ten years, it has become a scientific fact and a priceless boon to the human race. From giving away a few bottles the demand has increased until the sale for the past two years amounts to 1,032,000 bottles. Large bottles only $1.00.

CALLED TO REST.

On the 17th day of April 1888, Mrs. Emma Adams Smith quietly dropped into the sleep that knows no earthly Tecumseh, October 19th, 1859. She was married the 17th of July 1881 to Eugene R. Smith, of Franklin. She united with the Presbyterian church of Tecumseh about 9 years ago. The past 3 years they have been living in Franklin and have attended the Methodist church there. She attended the revival and prayer meetings when it was convenient for her to go. Mrs. Smith was highly esteemed and loved by all who knew her. She has been confined to the house and bed for nearly a year, being able to sit up but very little during her sickness. She kept up courage thinking she would get well until almost the last. She was very patient through her long sickness and read her bible and other good papers that kind friends would bring in. She leaves a husband and three small children, Robert L., Alfred H. and Mary M. to mourn her loss. She was the daughter of Robert and Mary J. Boyd. An affectionate and faithful wife, a tender and devoted mother and daughter and a loving sister has left us.

We shall meet but we shall miss you.
There will be one vacant chair,
Yet in heaven we hope to meet you.
Where Gods love we all shall share.

You have left your own dear children,
You have bid us all farewell
Yet which one of us will next go,
None alone but God can tell.

And now we bid you a long farewell,
How soon we'll meet no tongue can tell,
Oh Lord help us to live and die,
That we may meet again on high.

CERTAINLY THE BEST.

Papillon Clark's extract of flax Catarrh Cure, from an experiment, has grown to be the acknowledged superior of any remedy for similar purposes. Purely vegetable and scientifically prepared, it is absolutely harmless, and effects cures where all other known remedies and the most learned medical talent fail. That it is a favorite with all classes is evidenced by the fact that during the past two years, 86,000 gallons have been sold. Positively cures Catarrh, Hay Fever, Colds, etc., etc. Large bottles only $1.00.

For all diseases arising from impure blood, Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup is invaluable, as it is a sworn enemy to all poisons in the blood.

The finance for the bell was nearly all furnished by the school fund.

Beautiful Presque Isle Park.

The grand opening of the season at Presque Isle Park, the beautiful summer resort on Lake Erie, six miles below Toledo, will take place on Saturday and Sunday, June 9 and 10. The park has undergone many improvements since last season, which will add to the pleasure and comfort of its patrons. There has been an entire change in the management of Presque Isle Park this year, and a new policy will govern all the details in connection with this beautiful resort. The opening attraction will be Gilmore's Band, which will be heard in a mighty musical jubilee. Gilmore's Band comprises 65 musicians, besides 13 matchless soloists, and is the greatest aggregation of musical talent on earth. Gilmore will give four performances in all, Saturday and Sunday afternoons and evenings. There will be a grand chorus of 150 voices, supplemented by the anvil brigade and a battery of six pieces of artillery. It will be one of the grandest jubilees ever heard in America. Arrangements are now in progress whereby a grand excursion will run over the Lake Shore road on one of these dates. Following the band, the McCollin Opera Company will begin a three weeks engagement, to be followed by other standard attractions in the way of minstrelsy, light opera, burlesque and the spectacular drama.

A perfect specific—Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

THE COUNTY TEACHERS ASSOCIATION.

The meeting of this association on Saturday last was well attended and a very interesting program was presented. We are indebted to the Times for the following synopsis of the proceedings.

FORENOON SESSION.

Promptly at half-past nine Pres. D. A. Hammond called the Lenawee Co. teachers' association to order. About one hundred and fifty were present to hear the opening solo by Wert Allen. Soon the seats were filled, and long before the forenoon session closed chairs had been placed in the aisles, and the room crowded to its utmost capacity.

In the afternoon the room would not contain the company, and many crowded around the doors.

Prof. Carrier, of Adrian high school, opened the discussion of the subject of "Penmanship." He was followed by J. B. Tenbrook, of Fairfield. N. H. Hayden, Cyrus Smith and Henry Pattengill also joined in the discussion.

Prof. Hayden urged a more careful drill in the elements of penmanship, while Mr. Smith wished to draw a line betwen fancy drawing and actual writing. Rapidity should be taught as well as neatness.

Messrs. Allen and Wirt then favored the company with an instrumental duet, after which the society listened to a paper upon the subject, "Orthography," by Mrs. M. E. Parker, of Raisin Valley seminary. The reader gave valuable hints concerning practical methods of teaching this subject in district schools without a text book.

Miss Hettie McClue, of the Tecumseh public schools, opened the discussion.

The audience then took a recess of fifteen minutes.

Upon assembling again, Miss Ella P. Irish, of Adrian, gave a specimen recitation in drawing. She choose about a dozen pupils from the lower grades, and showed some very pretty blackboard work, which did credit to all parties.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

After an hour and a half intermission, the association convened for its afternoon session.

Henry Pattengill, editor of the Michigan School Moderator, was introduced. For an hour he entertained the audience, and gave valuable instruction upon 'School government.' It is impossible to give even a synopsis of this address. It was full of good thought, and alone paid all the trouble of the association. Teachers could not but be benefited by it. We are happy to say that there is some prospect of securing Mr. Pattengill as conductor of the Institute, next August.

After a short intermission, Henry Daniels, of Onsted, read a very instructive paper on "Methods of teaching history."

He was followed by N. H. Hayden, and F. R. Hathaway, who took part in the discussion.

The last paper of the day was read by Elbert Tripp, of Weston, a member of the county board of examiners. His subject "Written work in public schools," contained valuable hints and much vigorous English.

The late hour forbade the discussion of this interesting work.

County Secretary E. G. Walker, the next opened the discussion upon the subject, "Should the public schools maintain a department at the county fair?"

Several joined in this discussion, and all seemed to favor the idea. Judging from the tone of the remarks then made, such a department is an assured success.

This plan will be developed in the next few weeks, and though it is already late in the year, there is little doubt that a creditable exhibit will be made next fall.

In the middle of the afternoon, J. T. Rugh, of Adrian college, favored the association with an excellent solo.

Promptly upon time the meeting adjourned, to meet during the county institute, held in Adrian, next Aug.

If this meeting can be considered as an index of the permanent success of the association, Lenawee has taken her leading place among the counties of the State. Every teacher should be proud of Saturday's work, and resolve to be one to help place this society upon a sure foundation.

THE TARIFF A BANE TO LABOR.

A ruling class is always arrogant. Its own peculiar interest is to it the interest of the country it rules. It argues by dogmatizing and convinces by assertion. But in his assumption that much has been done for American laborers and artisans by the duties imposed on manufactured articles Sena or Palmer out-Herods Herod. He passes over that as a conceded fact, and building on it the proceeds to show that to continue doing for our labor now, we must protect it against further immigration. The assumption is false, the deduction illogical; the conclusion preposterous as applied to the country at large. The effect would be only to strengthen the protects by increasing their customers, by culling for their factories out of all Europe the stolid, up progressive serfs content with wages animals get—food and shelter—recruits for them, too, at the ballot box. The Herald will proceed to puncture the bloated insolence of this assumption.

The tariff since its first sordid line blotted American history, never gave a permanent dollar into the possession of the working class. Men, prostituting government, shut out of the country its natural supply of certain commodities, and then set themselves to manufacture them for it at the tariff's per cent. of advance in prices. At first both labor and machinery were scarce in the protected manufacture. They paid high prices for machines, for which the demand was greater than the supply. They competed in the labor market, and offered higher wages. Both these things they did but to secure a greater profit by greater production, when the profit was fixed by law, and the people, by the law, could buy only of them. Their capital was created by enormous profits. The bonds on which they built their factories became dividend paying shares. Their works so expanded that they began to feel each other's presence. They were as fish in a tank, always growing while it remains the same, for their power of production grew more rapidly than the power of paying or consuming. As such fish collide, so they began to compete. The first who felt this competition that lowered prices must at once cut the wages, for his profits must be kept, if possible, at the legalized rate. Because by the cheaper land here the farm laborer can get a greater share of the product, other things being equal, the American standard of living is higher than the foreign. When in the struggle between the workmen for the wages that supplied the needs of Americans and the manufacturer to win the profits for which he had passed the tariff, the setting it was in the manufacturer's control. The American standard must come down. He settled it, if not otherwise, by importing labor with a lower standard.

Count the time lost by strikes, time spent in nails and beer shops consequent upon partial payments made and lost. Count the irritations and conflicts of the artisans competing for employment. Compute the loss of interest in his labor by the man working finally for what he feels is less than he ought to get. Count the greater expense of living by the enhanced price of the protected articles of consumption. Count the increase of rent wrung from a stop time the high wages of a stimulated labor market prevented. Substract all these and items indefinitely beside, growing out of the conditions of the lowered standard of living. Where is the permanent dollar gained by the working class of America by the tariff?

The manufacturers tell us they have now outgrown their infancy. They can more than supply the home demand. As a class they combined to pass the law mainly upon the strong plea of enhancing profits, now again they combine to prevent any further operation of that law by so fixing the market price as to control, they claim to appeal to congress. Protection is going to be the law given the people. They constitute the "Trust" against competition whenever it shows its head, and tax at will every wearer of product in the land. Whether he be a protected wage-earner or an unprotected farmer, he must now pay the price they extort. The conditions of the wage earners all over the country, the increasing impoverishment of the small farmers in every state—what has brought about these results but the unequal law that fosters one form of industry at the expense of another!

when fully developed is remorseless as the tiger's praying. It is the function of a people's government, organized for the "general welfare," not to foster it, but to hold it in check. The "infant industry" was born of this greed.

Another decade of "protection" and the Pole or slav may sue his importer for obtaining labor, under false pretenses. Where is the state in which the American artisan or laborer has been benefited by the tariff? The full enormity was not revealed in law until the combination of 1867. In every state but Dakota wages of the farm laborers have declined since 1866, and have lost purchasing power varying from 25 to 125 per cent. The increasing number of tramps declares a glutted labor market.

Till laborers at the ballot box declare for tariff reform there is no bettering their conditions. Whatever may be the issue to-morrow, that is the question of this hour. No other issue can be made till that is settled. —Chicago Herald.

The Battle Half Won Already.

The country is now being rapidly educated upon the entire contention of restriction and anti-restriction of trade. Still, it is a matter admitting of debate whether, on the eve of a presidental contest, the people are in a position to reach an intelligent and sensible conclusion on the subject matter in dispute. The reformers, however, have already reached a position they had never previously attained. Thanks to the President, they have gained the ear of the people; they have dictated the political issue; they have put their opponents on the defensive; while in so doing they have in reality achieved a success which is little short of half the battle that is yet to be fought to the bitter end.

BONED SHAD.

How to Extract the Skeleton of a Fish Before Cooking It.

"After all, this is just about the finest fish that swims," said a Boston dealer the other morning, as he laid upon the scales a big shad.

"So far as flavor is concerned," replied the customer, "it is certainly unequaled, but the bones are a serious drawback."

The fish monger smiled. "If you don't like the bones," he remarked, "why don't you have them out before you cook the shad?"

"You are joking. It would not be possible without pulling the fish to shreds."

"You are quite mistaken, I assure you. If you like I will bone this one for you. Watch me closely, and next time you will be able to do this for yourself. You see, I keep already spread the fish out flat, as if for broiling, by dividing the back with a knife from the head to the tail. After disembowelling it I cut off the tail and head and then inserting my knife as carefully as possible to reach the backbone I dissect it out, as the bones would say, from the flesh, together with fin ribs and smaller bones attached to it. It is properly dissected when the whole of the bony system will have been removed, when the belly and fins or useless parts are cut away. Nothing now remains, you perceive, but the edible portion ready for the gridiron. First of course, boned shad must be drained. Scarcely a scrap of meat has been thrown away, and all the bones are taken out, save only two or three rows of delicate ribs that can be readily withdrawn from between the fillets of fish flakes. The shad's skeleton is far more elaborate in structure than most other fish, and the difficulty of performing this operation upon it is proportionately greater. With a mackerel or cod there is comparatively little trouble. Here is your shad now, sir, without a bone in it. It is a delicacy. I will venture to say that you have never sat upon any such dish."

Since the writer's interview with the marketman he has tried the process once himself, and with some success. There were perhaps half a dozen stray spines scattered through the fish when it came upon the festive board, but to all intents and purposes it was a boneless shad, and those who ate it pronounced it simply immense.

We accidentally overheard the following dialogue on the street yesterday.

Jones Smith, why don't you stop that disgusting hawking and spitting?

Smith, H w can I. You know I am a sufferer to catarrh.

J. Dear I did. I had the disease in its worst form but I am well now.

S. What did you do for it?

J. I used Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It cured me and it will cure you.

S. I've heard of it and by Jove I'll try it.

J. Do so. You'll find it at all the drug stores in Town.

DIGNITY OF BOOK CANVASSING.

Jay Gould Was Once A Hustling Agent—Washington, Bonaparte, Emerson, and Twain Were in the Business Also.

The advertisement promised $5 a day for [illegible] This is how the advertisement was given. [illegible] a day. Experience unnecessary; business easy and pleasant; paid every night. "J. N.——, —— Nassau St." The place was easily found.

"You want book agents," said the visitor.

"We want salesmen," responded a big, well dressed man, who sat on a pile of books in the corner, smoking a cigar. The big, well-dressed man was John T. Collier, a brother of P. F. Collier, the book publisher.

"Gentlemanly salesmen," said Mr. Collier a moment later, "are at an enormous premium in this city. We want men of good address—men who are gentlemen in appearance and manner and who have average business tact and enterprise. We will guarantee such men $50 a week for six hours' work a day."

"As book agents?"

"As book salesmen. You're afraid of the job, of course? The way book agents are guyed in the newspapers seems to have frightened good men out of the business."

"Have you worked as a book agent here in the city?"

"Well, I should say I had. Why, I went into Cladin's a few weeks ago, and how many sets of Dickens did I sell, do you think? I sold fifty-two sets, at $10 a set. My commission was 25 per cent. I cleared $130 out of that one house. On some works only 20 per cent. is paid—encyclopedias, for example. But the beauty of it is that your commission is paid promptly when you turn in the order. There's money in this business, I tell you. How did all the wealthy book publishers get their start? Why, as book agents. Appleton began that way. So did Osgood. So did my brother, P. F. Collier. Jay Gould was a book agent, and a most successful one. Jay's strong suit was in telling stories. He would get into a store or office and get all the clerks around him by telling a funny story. Then he would spring his book on them."

"A successful book agent must be a good story teller."

"Not necessarily. George Washington was a book agent for a short time, and I'm afraid he lacked one of the chief qualifications for a story teller—I mean the ability to lie. As for Longfellow, he was a phenomenally successful book agent. And Ralph Waldo Emerson was a book agent, and so was Mark Twain and Daniel Webster and Bret Harte and Rutherford B. Hayes and—and scores of others, including Napoleon Bonaparte."

"Are you not piling it on a little?"

"No, sir. I can prove that Bonaparte was a book agent for Boulanger et Cie., the noted French book publishers."

"What are some of the qualifications for a book agent—what are your methods?"

"One needs some nerve, of course. Nerve, tact and gentlemanly behavior are the chief requisites. It wouldn't do to go into a place shrinkingly, as though begging a favor. You must go in as though you expected a courteous welcome, as though you had called to confer a favor as much as to receive one. Be easy and confident, and waste no words with busy men. It is better to start with the head of a department, for if you catch him you will have little trouble catching the clerks. If he is satisfied you have a good thing, he will help you. I always find it that way. Good men are at a premium—but it is the same in every business.—New York Sun.

Some Remarkable Coincidences.

On Dec. 5, 1864, a boat crossing the Menai Strait was sunk, with eighty-one passengers on board. Only one escaped and his name was Hugh Williams.

On Dec. 5, 1875, another boat was sunk under the same circumstances. It had sixty passengers on board and all were lost except one—his name was Hugh Williams.

On Aug. 5, 1820, the Bristol Mercury records another such accident. There were at that time twenty-five passengers on board; only one escaped, and, wonderful to tell, his name was Hugh Williams. —Eastern Argus.

The Pope's Simple Life.

The simplicity of the Pope's life is best exemplified by the frugality of his table. His food costs 250 francs ($50) a month. He is a small eater and does not even possess a dining room.

He takes his meals at a little round table, which is served in the room in which he happens to be, and quickly disposes of them: coffee and bread without butter, after the second mass; soup, roast meat, a pudding and fruit at midday; a cup of broth at lo, with a wine glass of old claret, and at bedtime, about 11, another cup of beef tea, with a slice of cold meat remaining over from his dinner, which he always partakes of alone.

Rubber Shoes for Horses.

Many attempts have been made at improvement in shoeing horses in order to prevent slipping on smooth surfaces, all of which have been attended with more or less success.

The latest of these is the invention of Mr. Achille Delay, of Brussels, which consists of two pieces of steam vulcanized india rubber securely fixed in a slot deeply cut in the heel of an iron shoe, the effect being that, owing to the slight projection of the india rubber, a firm foothold of the horse, whether of asphalt, wood, or stone is secured.

His Little Bill.

A Chicago man who had erected a fine residence was surprised one day to learn that a gas fitter had been seen in the cellar. The plumber was sent for and given orders to stop up the gas fitter without regard to expense.

The gas fitter charged in his bill. It called for $1.25. He found it necessary to unplaster overhead and change the sewer pipe and drainage system of the premises to keep the rat out.

In the Wrong Business.

Customer (to barber)—How is business, Hans?

Barber (a Frenchman)—Dat business was bad, very bad. Mine brudder was a butcher, vun he makes lots of money. I think I could do vell as a butcher.

Customer—Why don't you, Hans? I think you would make a first class butcher.—Exit.

RHEUMATIC SYRUP CO.
Jackson, Mich.

THERE is nothing more miraculous in its effects, entirely removing from the face moth patches or brown spots purely by its action on the blood, than Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup.

A Letter from the Pastor of the M. E. Church.

FRANKLIN, OAKLAND CO., MICH., Dec. 2, 1887.

Rheumatic Syrup Company:

DEAR SIRS—Mr. A. A. Rust, of this place furnished me one bottle of your Rheumatic Syrup. Have taken about two thirds of it. Before taking it the slightest change in the weather affected me very much. I am now almost entirely free from the awful twinges of rheumatism, and changes in the weather do not affect me. S. A. LONG, Pastor of Methodist Church, Franklin, Mich.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the most aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect specific for women's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skilful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhœa, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "dragging down pains."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe, reliable agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when used for those chronic ailments and derangements incident to the "change of life," or critical period, commonly called the "climacteric."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with a course of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and small laxative dose of Dr. Pierce's Pellets (Sugar-coated Little Liver Pills), cures the worst cases of liver and bladder diseases. They quickly remove pimples, blotches, eruptions and pimples on the face, and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be returned. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and continuously adhered to for many years.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS
$22 TO $900
The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.
Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequaled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogue free.
PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune, and other important advantages.
A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians and tuners, sent together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant. Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

A Philadelphian Gives Facts About the Thrifty Friends.

"V. S. C." writes from Philadelphia that the population of that city is upward [illegible] and are Quakers. There are nearly eight hundred churches of different denominations. There are eleven Quaker meeting houses.

Contrary to a very general opinion, Chestnut street is not thronged with portly men in shad-bellied coats, nor with women in sober drab dresses and coal-scuttle bonnets. Not is it true that the majority of business men use "thee and thou" in addressing each other, or that street car conductors use this plain language in asking the passengers to move a little farther up front.

As small as the Quaker population is, its beneficent influence is felt in the business life of the town. The mania for speculation is less pronounced here than in any other city in the Union. There are more solid investments, fewer fictitious values. These are standing Quaker monuments of what thrift and industry will do when compared with the feverish race for wealth that is shortening life everywhere.

Joseph Wharton is a representative Hicksite. He is worth $3,000,000, made in the nickel-plate business.

Isaiah V. Williamson is another wealthy Quaker. He is worth between $15,000,000 and $17,000,000. Dry goods produced the bulk of this, but part of it came from investments in stock. Not speculation. Goodness alive, no! When Mr. Williamson went on "the street" he bought outright and the certificate was handed over to him. He lives plainly. His expenses for shelter, food and raiment will not exceed $1,200 in a year.

Clement M. Biddle, of the Biddle Hardware Company, is another example of business tact and sterling integrity. He is a member of the Hicksite branch and is very wealthy.

Joshua L. Bailey, Orthodox, has made his [illegible] in the political des[illegible] of the [illegible], as well as being a philanthropist.

Samuel P. Shipley, president of the Provident Life and Trust Company, is another influential orthodox Quaker. So are Wistar Brown and John [illegible]m. John B. Garrett and Philip C. Garrett are prominent as careful business men. They are wealthy. Friend Phillips showed himself to be a fighting Quaker in the way he pitched into a corrupt political ring and helped wipe it out.

It is impossible to correctly estimate the personal wealth of this small colony, but it will foot up close to $30,000,000. The value of the lands and buildings owned by the society in Philadelphia will approximate $6,000,000. The meeting house at Fourth and Arch street, the heart of the city, is on an acre lot, and is owned in England. It will never be sold; or, at least, it is more likely to stay in the hands of the present owners than either old Trinity or St. Paul's in New York.

UNITED STATES COINS.

The Finest Collection in the World.

The most complete collection of United States and colonial coins in the world, greatly excelling the collection of the United States Mint, is owned by Loring G. Parmalee, of Boston. It represents thirty years' careful search and study, and its face value is less than $1,000, while its actual cost has been more than $65,000.

T. Harrison Garrett, of Baltimore, the brother of Robert Garrett, has a set of United States cents, the probable face value of which is $2 or $3, but which cost him from $2,000 to $3,000, and his entire coin collection so far has cost not far from $40,000.

There are many collections whose cost and actual value run from $10,000 to $20,000, and nearly every city of the country has its grand collector. Julius Brown, of Atlanta, the son of Senator Joe Brown, has a fine lot of coins, and so have J. B. Ten Eyck, of Albany, J. H. Farrington, of Saratoga, and others.

A Dog That Understood His Business.

I saw an illustration of the use of the inevitable dog on the express wagon yesterday. A rather trampish looking fellow was teasing one of these creatures, apparently for amusement only when the driver came along and pulled the dog to the other side of the wagon from which he was barking vociferously at the untidy looking stranger. A moment afterward I noticed the man's hand pass over the opposite side of the wagon, but before he could draw it out the dog, whom the expressman had quietly let loose, had seized him forcibly by the arm. The pain was enough to make the man drop a package on which he had laid hold, and it was not easy to make the dog relax his grip. When this was done the expressman said to the tramp: "Now you just keep clear o' that critter. He knows you, and knew at the start what you wanted to do, and next time he won't let you off so easy." Beyond Earthly Comprehension.

Little Alice frequently begins to say her prayers before her mother is ready. She repeats them as she does her nursery rhymes, very rapidly, running the words together into an unintelligible jumble, meanwhile swaying her body back and forth in time with her utterances. Her tot of a brother sat watching her the other night and listening to "now I lay me" and "twinkle, twinkle little star" with impatience and amazement depicted on his countenance. When she had finished he said, "Mother, do you suppose God knew what she was saying?"

"Why certainly, dear."

"Well, he must be pretty smart, then." (New York World.

A Girl Carries off Her Lover.

We have often heard of young men stealing their sweethearts and running away to get married, but never before the other day have we heard of a young lady stealing a young man and running away to get married.

A young lady from North Georgia has been spending some time with friends about five miles from here in the country, and upon getting ready to go home she eloped with one of our most prosperous young farmers. The man's father hearing what had been done became enraged, and forbade them ever going to his house again.

The young couple not being satisfied to live near, took the cars here for the Lone Star State, where they will make their home in the future. (Moosetown Humming Bird.

OLD MILITARY COURTESY.

The "Gentlemen, Fire First," Courtesy on the High Seas.

In the days when France and England were saying to each other, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther," and backing up their word with gunpowder, six English frigates, under the command of Captain Killigrew, sighted two French men-of-war. The commander's ship was the first to come up with one of the French vessels named the Content.

"The whole French crew," says the historian—it was in 1795—"were at prayers, and he might have poured in his broadside with great advantage, which, however, he refused to do, adding this remarkable expression: 'It is beneath the courage of the English nation to surprise their enemies in such a posture.'"

Admiral Howe, who, during our war for independence, defeated the French squadron under D'Estaing off Rhode Island, showed a similar high-bred politeness when a post-captain. The story is told by Clark Russell's "Book for the Hammock."

While the British fleet was lying off Cape Race, two large French men-of-war were discovered and Howe, with a press of sail, gave chase. Coming alongside of the sternmost, the Alcide, he was hailed by her captain to know whether it was peace or war.

"Prepare for the worst," replied Howe, "as I expect every moment a signal from the flagship to fire upon you for not bringing to."

Then observing a number of soldiers and ladies on deck, he pulled off his hat and begged they would go below, as they had no personal concern in the action. Seeing the red flag hoisted at the masthead of the admiral's ship, Howe told the French captain that the signal was out to engage.

"Begin, if you please," cried out the Frenchman.

"If you please, monsieur, you begin," answered Howe. The two ships delivered their broadsides almost simultaneously. The Alcide struck in half an hour.

"My lads," cried Howe to his crew, "they have behaved like men! Treat them like men. (Youth's Companion.

HE ILLUSTRATED THE ARGUMENT.

The Clever Way by Which a Lawyer Established His Case.

Once, when Mr. Martin (now Congressman) was a district attorney in Texas, he was prosecuting a man for murder at Nacogdoches. The accused was a New Orleans drummer, who, it was alleged, stabbed a man to death in a room at a hotel. The plea of self defense was set up, the accused claiming that the victim attempted to kill him, and that the knife with which the wounds were made belonged to the dead man, and that defendant wrenched it from him in the deadly struggle.

The defense brought the prisoner into court in the light summer suit he wore the day the killing took place. The prosecution aimed to prove that the prisoner went to his victim's room for the purpose of killing him, and that he had two bowie knives and a revolver concealed on his person in anticipation of the fight. The defense put the prisoner and his clothes in evidence, and called the attention of the impossibility of concealing a pistol and two knives in such thin, close-fitting clothes.

When it came Mr. Martin's time to sum up for the prosecution, to the surprise of everybody, he appeared in court in a dude suit of clothes as nearly similar to those worn by the prisoner as they well could be. He asked the jurymen if they thought he had any deadly weapons concealed on his person at the time.

The jurors gave a negative shake to their heads.

As they did so Martin stuck his hand inside his vest and pulled out a long-bladed knife and threw it on the table. Then he pulled a pistol from his hip pocket and threw it on the table. To make a long story short, Martin pulled out seven long-bladed knives and four revolvers that he had concealed on his person. He knocked the bottom out of the plea of self-defence, the jury found the prisoner guilty and a few months later he was hanged.

To Poison the King.

A story from Belgrade, not altogether reliable, makes the position of the King of Servia appear rather uncomfortable. It relates that after the harum-scarum speech with which King Milan opened last Skuptchina, a glass of water was placed before him by his prime minister, Ristics. Thus far the story is known to be true, and it is also true that a few days afterwards Ristics had ceased to govern.

The doubtful part of the story declares that the King seized the glass, looked suspiciously at the water for a second, put it down untouched, and at the close of the sitting carried it away to a chemist, who informed him that the contents of the glass would have caused a vacancy on the Servian throne. Ristics' plan for getting rid of the obnoxious monarch, if indeed, he had any such plan, would have been no new thing in Servia, whose rulers have frequently had their careers violently shortened.

A Yankee's Strange Adventures.

A leading druggist in Lynn, Mass., tells a curious story of his father's adventures. The father's name was John Colcord, of Sandford, Me., and he was a sailorman. Years ago he was wrecked on one of the Sandwich Islands, and being a true son of Maine, set up as a manufacturer of gods for the natives, making the idols from the iron cast ashore from wrecked vessels. These indestructible deities became very popular, and so did Colcord, who married a native girl.

One day, in Honolulu, he met a Maine sailor, who had also been wrecked. The man proved to be an old school-mate of Colcord. He brought Colcord's four children to this country to be educated, and they all afterwards went back. Colcord, after the death of his wife, came home to Maine and married again, and the druggist is one of the children by the last marriage.

A PRACTICAL MATRON.

The Counsel She Administered to a Disconsolate Widow.

A lady dressed in deep mourning, and having a look of Bostonian refinement and reserve, got into a Chicago train bound for [illegible] Kansas, near Hogwood Creek, there boarded the train a native of the soil in the shape of a woman in a green delaine dress, a blue and red shawl, and a yellow nubia. She dropped easily and gracefully into the seat in front of the lady in black, turned around, stared hard for a moment, and then said:

"Widder?"

"I—I—did you speak to me?" asked the lady in surprise.

"Yes'm—widder?"

"Yes."

"Thought so. Quite recent, eh?"

"Yes."

"What ailed him?"

"Consumption."

"Linger a good while?"

"I—I—yes."

"Much ag'ny?"

"Yes, indeed."

"Coughed a sight, hey?"

"Oh, yes; but I—"

"I know what'd cure him in less'n a month. Never knowed it to fail, an' I've seed it tried in cases where they'd been give up by five doctors. Yes'm. But it ain't no use talkin' 'bout that now. Any children?"

"Yes, three."

"His folks got 'em?"

"No; but really, I—"

"Two boys an' a girl, or two girls an' a boy?"

"Two girls."

"Oh! Did you get your thirds out an' out?"

"Really, madam, I—"

"Or did he leave a will?"

"Excuse me, but—"

"The law gives a woman her thirds, but 'tain't often she gits 'em out 'n' out. I think she'd ort to have half, don't you?"

"I—I—really, I don't know."

"Well, I do. Was you made gardeen of the children?"

"No—that is—"

"Well, I bet I'd be gardeen of my own young uns if my man was to die. These gardeens git the prop'ty half the time. Did he have money in bank?"

"I beg your pardon, but—"

"You ort to made him put it in your name. It makes it lots easier when the man dies to settle things up. His kin try to break the will."

"Excuse me—"

"A man cayn't die nowadays 'thout a pack o' his folks try in' to break the will, no matter how many wives and children he has. You goin' to wear crape all the time or only a year?"

"Pardon me, but—"

"It's becomin' to you, but kinder expensive for common wear. But, dear me, you ain't more'n thirty-six or thirty-seven, are you?"

No reply.

"I don't know how you feel 'bout second marriages, but I—"

"Oh, madam, please—"

"You'll marry agin, now I'll bet you do. Oh, I know how you feel now. My sister Cindy felt and talked jist so, an' she married agin in six months an' done well, too. I'd wait a year, if I was you. It looks better, shows respect and all that; but if I was young as you an' had only three children I'd—"

But the lady in black had fled to the next car, and her consoler turned to the man on her right and said:

"Talk 'bout her not marryin' agin! I've an idee she's goin' West a-purpose to see if she kin do well there, and I don't blame her." (Detroit Free Press.

His Best Work.

It is very common for young men, I think, to determine the quality of their work by the price which they are paid for it. I only get, says such a one, five dollars a week, and I am sure that I am giving five dollars' worth of service; if my employer wants more let him pay more; if he wants better let him give better wages.

This is specious reasoning, but it is false; and it is destructive to the best work, and therefore to the best manhood. No man can afford to do anything less well than his best. He who always strives to do his best work, in the very process of striving, will grow better and better. Not only he will grow more skillful in that particular workmanship, but he will be better equipped for other workmanship. This is an absolutely universal law, it is the absolutely universal road to promotion.

The man who is careful to give nothing more than he gets, rarely gets more than he gives. The man who works for his own sake, who puts the best part of himself into every blow that he strikes, who mixes all his work with brain and conscience, who studies to render the largest possible service regardless of the compensation which it brings, sooner or later will find his way on and up. The world learns his worth and calls him to higher service. Nor is this all. By stirring himself up to do always the best that he can, he grows into a power to do better and ever better. (Lyman Abbott.

Lovey Dovey.

A woman weighing something like two hundred pounds, came into the Grand Central Station the other day clinging to the bony arm of a little man who probably tipped the beam at ninety in his winter clothing.

He led the way to the ladies' waiting-room, deposited the lady in two chairs, and started out.

"You won't be gone long, will you, dearie?" she gasped out. "I feel so timid."

"No, darling; I'll be right back. Don't worry about me."

"Oh, I shall, dearie, I can't help it, and I dread being left alone."

"Well, I'll be back in ten minutes."

"Oh, do; I feel so nervous."

He was gone fifteen minutes, and when he reached her side again she tried to tumble into his arms, and said sweetly and childishly:

"Oh, Harry! You were gone an age. I was so frightened! Ah, Harry, I fear that you will find that you have married a very, very silly little girl. (Tid Bits.

A Good Word for the Dress Coat.

As to the much abused steel pen coat, it is not beautiful, certainly. But properly constructed, as our forefathers wore it, made double-breasted and to button across the chest, it is a remarkably good work-a-day garment, and I wonder very much it has gone out of fashion for morning wear.

For any kind of bodily work or exercise it is absolutely unrivaled. It has no useless skirts to flop about and impede the movements, and the pockets, well out of the way, are only inconvenient when you sit down. It is the best walking coat ever devised.

AMMONIA IN BAKING POWDERS.

Among the recent discoveries in science and chemistry, none is more important than the uses to which common ammonia can be properly [illegible] indicate that this familiar salt is hereafter to perform an active part in the preparation of our daily food.

The carbonate of ammonia is an exceedingly volatile substance. Place a small portion of it upon a knife and hold it over a flame, and it will almost immediately be entirely developed into gas and pass off into the air. The gas thus formed is a simple composition of nitrogen and hydrogen. No residue is left from the ammonia. This gives it its superiority as a leavening power over soda and cream of tartar used alone, and has induced its use as a supplement to these articles. A small quantity of ammonia in the dough is effective in producing bread that will be lighter, sweeter, and more wholesome than that risen by any other leavening agent. When it is acted upon by the heat of baking the leavening gas that raises the dough is liberated. In this act it uses itself up as it were; the ammonia is entirely diffused, leaving no trace or residuum whatever. The light, fluffy, flaky appearance, so desirable in biscuits, etc., and so sought after by professional cooks, is said to be imparted to them only by the use of this agent.

The bakers and baking powder manufacturers producing the finest goods have been quick to avail themselves of this useful discovery, and the handsomest bread and cake are now largely risen by the aid of ammonia, combined of course with other leavening material.

Ammonia is one of the best known products of the laboratory. If, as seems to be justly claimed for it, the application of its properties to the purposes of cooking results, in giving us lighter and more wholesome bread, buscuit and cake, it will prove a boon to dyspeptic humanity, and will speedily force itself into general use in the new field to which science has assigned it.

MODERN TOWERS OF BABEL.

An Architect's Scheme for Buildings Twenty-Eight Stories High.

Architect L. S. Buffington, of Minneapolis, has secured a large number of patents, both in this country and Europe, on an invention of his own, which he claims will revolutionize the world of building. The patents cover all parts of a system known as Buffington's Patented Iron Building Construction. By it buildings can be constructed of any desired height, the favorite number of the inventor being twenty eight stories. The building will be entirely of iron, starting from a foundation like the base of a bridge pier. Laminated iron pillars starts from this foundation, diminishing in size as they ascend. They are to be braced diagonally by iron lattice girders with horizontal iron beams. The covering is also to be iron, and outside of this may be ornamental sheeting of stone, terra cotta or anything else. Mr. Butlington has submitted the plan to practical engineers, and no flaws can be found. A syndicate of capitalists is backing his system and will erect in this city a building eighty feet square and twenty-eight stories high. Architect Buffington says: "If a bridge can be built out 700 or 800 feet into space from a pier, what is to hinder us going as high as we choose in a building? The syndicate which is backing me includes some of the best men in the city, who control plenty of capital, and as soon as a few details are settled we will publish our plans."

A most wonderful Remedy.—We are in daily receipt of many unsolicited testimonials of the extraordinary curative properties of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup when applied to coughs, colds, and similar ailments. The impression, amounting to a conviction, has taken hold of the popular mind that the "old reliable" is the one cough remedy which can be depended on in all instances to cure those troublesome affections. Obstinate cases—such as have almost become chronic—are cured every day in the week, by the use of two or three bottles of this peerless preparation. Mr. K. Nichols, in the employ of Adams Ex. Co., Baltimore, Md., certifies that his wife was cured of a cough, which had troubled her for six years, only two small bottles being used for the purpose. He pronounces it a "most wonderful remedy" in the following language.

"My wife having been very much annoyed for the past five or six years with a tickling sensation in the throat, which at last became almost unbearable, was induced against her will to try Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, and to her surprise, as well as my own, two 25 cent bottles entirely cured her. It's a most wonderful remedy. My son was also cured of a very distressing cold by its use." K. NICHOLS. 1 S. Carey St., Balto, Md.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.
The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.
It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.
The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.
WHAT IT CURES.
All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.
It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.
Over 40 Years.
This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.
Prices 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

THE INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN.

BY MONCURE D. CONWAY.

Although the press has fairly reported the proceedings of the eight days' Council of Women which has just closed its sessions at Washington, the significance of that congress, its picturesqueness, its impressiveness, have not been fully reported in any account I have seen. Although for more than a generation I have been an interested and tolerably close observer of what is called the Woman's Movement, I have for the first time become aware, while attending these sessions, of the immeasurable work for human benefit which women have achieved during that time. There are many besides myself who can recall the chorus of ridicule which greeted the earliest demand for political equality put forth by a few women forty years ago. It came from a little Methodist chapel at Seneca Falls, New York, where Lucretia Mott and Elizabeth Cady Stanton had summoned a "Woman's Rights Convention." It was early in July, and with the celebrations of Independence day ringing in their ears, these ladies adopted a new Declaration of Independence. It was a clever travesty of the Jeffersonian document and began: "When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one portion of the family of men to assume among the people of the earth a position different from that which they have hitherto occupied, but one to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect for the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes that impel them to such a course." Every accusation against George the Third was turned against the masculine absolutism. "He has compelled her to submit to laws in the formation of which she had no voice." "He has taken from her all right in property, even to the wages she earns." And so forth. Even in that little assembly of 1848 the claim to female suffrage was warmly opposed and carried by only a small majority. The burning question had been, for sixteen years, whether woman should be allowed to speak in public. The anti-slavery society had split on that issue. In 1840 the Garrisonian wing sent a delegation to a World's Anti-Slavery Convention in London, of whom eight were women—Lucretia Mott at their head. After a heated debate the female delegates were refused admission; whereupon the male delegates declined to act, and London lost its opportunity of listening to the eloquence of both Lucretia Mott and Wendell Phillips. Mrs. Stanton, then on her bridal tour, heard the debate. There her friendship with Lucretia Mott was formed, and on their return home they inaugurated a quiet propaganda, which resulted in the convention referred to and its "amusing" declaration. Nevertheless, their movement grew. It was for a time chiefly among Quakers, among whom it had always been the custom to recognize female equality in schools and religious meetings. Now, after two-score years, some of those "pioneers" live to see vast results from their Quaker meetings. Elizabeth Stanton, whose snowy hair surrounds her blonde face like a halo, has seen at the National Capital a vast harvest, sprung from the seed then sown. This Council was not, indeed, summoned in the immediate interest of female suffrage, but it is largely the result of the awakening of women to their public duties which then began. So much credit to that movement being awarded, it may be affirmed that the results attained are of far more importance than any that could have been anticipated from the particular aim of those peaceful revolutionists of 1848.

In the Grand Opera House, at Washington, gaily decorated in every part with flags of nations and bannerets of states, every seat occupied, a brilliant company gathered daily, morning and evening, to make and to hear reports of the work of women. There were delegates from other countries, France Italy, Denmark, Finland, Canada; three accomplished ladies from England to report that there women have the municipal franchise, and are included in the new local government bill of Lord Salisbury. But the main work reported was from America. More than thirty organizations were represented. The variety of these, their intricacy, extent, experiences, and diversified operations, are bewildering. Temperance and peace societies, missions—half religious, half charitable—training schools, clubs, suffrage societies, social purity society, hospitals, labor organizations, all had their impressive history and account of services to render. A small Baptist charitable mission in a remote part of New Hampshire sends a lady of eighty-two years, able to tell a thrilling story of helpful work. A lady from Boston tells of reading rooms for women, with a bureau of information which includes churches, theaters, offices, homes; with lawyers retained to render assistance gratis to any woman deprived of her wages or otherwise wronged. And here are accomplished ladies from New York to describe equally important services for well-to-discusses all questions except those bearing on religion, politics and woman's rights. Medical ladies related their struggles in trying to taste the still forbidden fruit of knowledge. A scientific lady, in collusion with a great authority on brains, of the "opposite" sex, refuted the prejudiced statements of Dr. Hammond concerning the inferiority of the female brain. Another, a law partner with her husband in Iowa, spoke in a way which would have impressed the judicial committee before which some of the delegates have pleaded. Everywhere activity, competence, culture, earnestness. Emerson used to say that eloquence was cheap at antislavery meetings. The same is true of this woman's congress. I remember days passed in the capitol listening to the eloquence of Webster, Clay, Corwin, Seward, Benjamin: since those times I have never heard speeches so impressive, eloquent, statesmanlike, as those in Albaugh's Opera House. They were free from rant, and, if sometimes touched with fanaticism, were always quiet and candid. One very handsome lady, in an effective address, said that if men should finally refuse to admit women to participation in their political work, nothing would be left women but to set up a government of their own. It struck me that this was what they are really doing. A hundred years ago the original thirteen states were in hot debate whether they would ratify the Constitution. Now here were delegates from states more important than geographical ones, moral and spiritual states organized for the varied service of humanity and to confront every form of evil. They have adopted a constitution, with Frances Willard for President and Susan Anthony for Secretary of State. A wealthy lady has donated to them a whole block in Washington to found here a great university of women, to train them for all kinds of service to their country. It was the dream of Washington, Jefferson, Madison and other forefathers, that a great American university should be founded in the federal city. It looks as if the women were destined to fulfill it. If these earnest and eloquent women, who have hitherto had to beg men for permission to help them, to heal where men must wound, should in this friendlier era form their ideal state, send their weaponless soldiers to conquor wrongs, establish their merciful police to aid the progress of civilization, might they not elevate the national government even more than by votes? Might not their ideal moral government hover, dovelike, over the chaos of parties, over the "bosses" and caucuses, until these should be raised and refined into something more worthy to be called a Republic? That such might be the result is suggested by the fact that since women have been awakened to the condition of their country, legal and political, momentous changes have taken place. One after another barbarous "survival" has been shamed out of the masculine code. Women now have rights to property, to professional work, to colleges and degrees, secured by their appeals to reason and justice. Some wrongs remain; even great New York preserves the unjust law which deprives women of any control over the children they bear. But few of the Northern States preserve that relic of ancient wrong. It is certain that such influences as these must continue, and it becomes wise men to consider whether they shall not share in this new order and co-operate with it, until the time shall be ripe to end the long divorce between the higher energies of man and woman.

Pathos and humor have been quaintly mingled in the proceedings. Ramabai Pundita, who speaks English, told the sorrows of the zenana; and when she gave the Hindu doctrine of woman and how she brought all evil into the world, it was only her simple face which repressed suspicion of a covert attack on doctrines nearer home. The little Pundita must have been puzzled by the presentation of an American Indian, a large much beaded princess, whose jolly looks did not quite confirm Alice Fletcher's report, that Indian women had declared to her they were better off as Indians than under white law. President Willard, as we may now call her, began her speech on organization by holding up her hand and saying "Look at that!" We were thinking it was a neat hand when she said "There's not much in it. But look at that!" With this she held out the same hand doubled into a little fist, symbolizing the potency of organization. The fist was not formidable. Were it only large enough to grasp a sword perhaps there would now be no suffrage question. The little symbolical fist so held out raised a smile at first, but it may have reminded others besides myself that the demand of woman on man is the only one that does not threaten, which appeals to the sentiment of justice. Helen Gardiner, who has long been an invalid confined to her room in New York, suddenly appeared here and made the vigorous speech, full of wit as well as science, vivisecting Hammond's statement on the female brain. To a start-home, she answered, "I've been resurrected for this occasion." This brilliant lady, by the way, made some allusion to "the fable of the Garden of Eden," from which a sensation might have been anticipated. But the remarkable discourses from members of the Council to which Washington listened on Easter Sunday, proved that independence of thought has extended to religion. Many of these ladies are called orthodox, but I am told it is rare to find one who believes in eternal punishment, and that many reject the narrative of the Fall. As authority loves authority, so does one kind of freedom love another. Easter Sunday afternoon was given up to a succession of religious utterances; one speaker was a Congregationalist, another a Methodist, another (Mrs. Hooker, Mrs. Stowe's sister) described herself as a Christian Spiritualist. Boston spoke through Ednah Cheney, a "Parkerite," and from the same region came an able lady named Elizabeth Stuart, who presides over a "Society of Humanity." I have rarely heard so much unconscious heresy uttered by persons supposed to be orthodox. There was a learned and ingenious address by Mrs. Gage, explaining that in the word "Jehovah" are combined the male and female principles of deity; also, that the Dove; the Holy Spirit, originally represented the divine feminine principle. For this she referred to the Aramaic Gospel, in which Jesus says "My Mother, the Holy Spirit." Thus there were many varieties and shades of theological opinion, but also a prevailing religious spirit. It may also be doubted if so many different, even antagonistic, views were ever before uttered so freely on the same platform without eliciting an inharmonious note, or even a word of reply from one to another. It would appear that in the presence of a great and absorbing practical cause and concern abstract opinion is relegated to a subordinate position. Are we to gain liberation from dogmatism through the reconciling and charitable influence of women—who are sometimes said to keep the churches going? Are they to remind a dogmatising world of the old saying, "I desire not sacrifice, but charity?" Some traces of asceticism may be discoverable in this Council, lingering, perhaps, from its Quaker sponsors; some of the leaders insist on a world without wine or the Havana solace, and frown on fashionable costumes and dances; but the puritanical phase is already passing, and it will probably be found in the end here, as in England, that the movement towards larger female freedom and culture will include the evolution of a mode more beautiful and healthful.

Robert Browning once remarked to his preacher, after a sermon on nature, "You ought not to try and describe nature, but the impression nature has made on you." I have remembered his advice in speaking of this great Council of Women. It were idle to attempt to describe it. I have but briefly and lamely spoken of the impression it made on me.

REPUBLICAN DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The Republicans of this Congressional District held their convention at Adrian last week Tuesday.

Gen. Geo. Spaulding was elected President and J. E. Beal, Secretary.

The committee on credentials submitted their report which was adopted and the work of the convention was quickly dispatched.

A call for the names of delegates to the national convention, at Chicago, by counties, resulted in the selection of the following, the gentlemen from Lenawee and Washtenaw serving as alternates:

Monroe—Gen. Geo. Spaulding.
Hillsdale—C. T. Mitchell.
Washtenaw—J. L. Gilbert.
Lenawee—B. F. Grayes.

On the congressional district committee the following were appointed:

Hillsdale—W. P. Upwood.
Lenawee—C. R. Miller.
Monroe—C. A. Critchett.
Washtenaw—O. K. Owen.

Under the head of miscellaneous business, C. R. Miller moved that the delegates be instructed to cast their ballots, and use all honorable means in their power to bring about the selection, at the Chicago convention, of Russell A. Alger for the office of president.

The delegates to the state convention were also instructed to do all in their power to secure the election of J. K. Boies as a delegate-at-large to the Chicago convention.

Hon. John K. Boies was called to the front, and he made a stirring speech, that called up much enthusiasm.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Democrats met in County Convention last Thursday at Adrian, with a good representation, every township but three being represented. James Schermerhorn was elected chairman and Rial Clay secretary. The business was soon dispatched.

Two delegates at large were chosen to the State Convention, Hon. A. L. Millard, of Adrian and James Schermerhorn, of Hudson. The district caucuses selected the following delegates.

FIRST DISTRICT.

V. Judson, I. C. Mills, E. R. Smith, C. F. Field, C. E. Judson, Wm. Arnold, Dale Munson.

SECOND DISTRICT.

Joseph Michaels, H. Bowen, J. W. Finch, L. Ladd, C. R. Porter, H. B. Robb, and Fred Haag, jr.

THIRD DISTRICT.

Edwin Haff, John H. Underwood, Joseph Marsh, Geo. W. Bailey, Caspar Rorick, O. Howes, Martin Poucher.

The following were presented as county committeemen:

Hudson—O. R. Pierce.
Rome—Wm. H. Hood.
Rollin—Spencer Chandler.
Cambridge—J. H. Clayson.
Ridgeway—John W. Houseman.
Raisin—Willis Chatfield.
Deerfield—Wm. F. Weisinger.
Macon—B. F. DePuy.
Palmyra—C. R. Keever.
Tecumseh—F. B. Wood.
Clinton—A. B. Vandemark.
Riga—M. Ricklow.

S. Bean moved that C. Humphrey be again elected chairman of the county committee. Carried by acclamation, after which the convention adjourned.

PROHIBITION COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Prohibitionists of Lenawee County met at Adrian last week Wednesday. The County committee assembled at ten o'clock to consider the report of the committee on newspaper. $600 had already been pledged. It was resolved to raise the remaining $400 required then and there. G. P. Waring put his name down for $100 and Dr. Stewart, of Tecumseh, did the same. Other pledges were speedily given until the balance was all made up.

The convention proper was then called to order. J. H. Osborn, of Tecumseh, was elected chairman and Jesse Rogers secretary.

Delegates to the State Convention were then chosen as follows:

FIRST DISTRICT.

W. S. Kimball, B. F. Steinhoff, Z. Cook, G. P. Waring, W. H. Moore, Milton Wolverton, R. Wade, L. S. Wilmoth.

SECOND DISTRICT.

E. B. Sutton, A. G. Baker, Ira Ladd, L. H. Foster, C. D. West, J. A. Wellington, A. L. Reynolds, Clarence Frost.

THIRD DISTRICT.

Walden Wing, R. P. Boody, C. M. Lewis, J. M. Lamb, Silas Aldrich, I. Beal, Chas. Greenleaf.

The Convention selected the following County Committee.

Chairman—G. P. Waring.
City, First ward—L. R. Damon.
Second ward—Anson Backus.
Third ward—J. A. Wellington.
Fourth ward—R. W. Boyd.

Riga—L. Way.
Rollin—Frank E. Harvey.
Rome—E. J. Stoddard.
Seneca—G. Henry Baker.
Tecumseh—M. P. Brown.
Woodstock—Thos. Beal.

Most everything in this world is full of deception. Few things are what they seem, but the results obtained for Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic far exceed all claims. It restores lost nerve force, cures dyspepsia, and all stomach, liver, kidney and bladder troubles. It is a perfect tonic, appetiser, blood purifier, a sure cure for ague and malarial diseases. Price 50 cents of Dr. Geo. Ferguson.

ONE BOTTLE CURED HIM.

A. H. Thompson, Rrockford, Ill., writes; "I have been troubled with Catarrh for years, notning helped me until I tried Papillon Catarrh Cure. I followed directions, and with less than one bottle, I am cured." Papillon (extract of flax) Catarrh Cure will positively and premanently cure Bronchial Catarrh, Acute or Chronic Catarrh, also Rose Cold and Hay Fever. Large bottles $1.00

For all diseases arising from impure blood, Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup is invaluable, as it is a sworn enemy to all poisons in the blood.

MEMORIAL DAY.

"With sable-draped banners and slow measured tread,
The flower-laden ranks pass the Gates of the dead;
And seeking each mound where
A comrade's form rests,
Leave tear-bedewed garlands,
To bloom on his breast."

In harmony with the above sentiment, and to inaugurate arrangements for the proper observance of Memorial Day by the citizens of Tecumseh and vicinity, Messrs. Geo. Heesen, John D. Shull, A. P. Coddington, George S. Tiffany, Alexander Turner, Fred Rosacrans, J. M. Ingersoll, Fred B. Wood, Alva Spayde and Will H. Hayden have been appointed a committee which will please assemble at G. A. R. Hall promptly at 8 o'clock local time, to-morrow, Friday evening.

AN OLD RELIC.

Mrs. Horatio Keyser has in her possession a copy of the "Ulster County Gazette." It is No. 88, Vol. 12, and is dated Jan. 4, 1800. It is a four col. folio sheet. The inside is dressed in mourning and contains an account of the burial of Gen. Geo. Washington. An announcement thereof by the Senate to President John Adams, and the President's reply. It contains quite a batch of foreign news and several legal notices and advertisements. The sheet is copy-righted and published by Samuel Freer & Son. We append a few of the advertisements, verbatim.

New bill boards have been put up and a circus is expected to strike Tecumseh on the 29th.

A new Savings bank has been organized at Adrian which will commence business June 1st.

The Adrian District Sunday School Institute of the M. E. church will be held at Dundee, May 22 and 23.

Abner Wilson has added a lot of new hot beds to his garden, and is growing a tremendous crop of plants this spring.

At the Republican State Convention, Hon. J. K. Boies, of Hudson, was elected one of the delegates at large to the National Convention.

William Starr has moved to Adrian, where he has procured a job in a furniture factory. In his removal Tecumseh looses one of her best workmen.

Jim Dunnigan is agent for Carroll & Boardman's summer drinks. The firm make several non-alcoholic drinks which are becoming very popular wherever introduced.

A base ball club is being organized in this village, and they will undoubtly tackle the gravel pit nine before the season closes. A sandy contest may be looked for.

The bar and other furnishings in the saloon formerly owned by Jim Cole were taken to Adrian Tuesday by Fisher, the brewer of that city to satisfy a debt held by him.

A new time card on the Lake Shore will go into force next Sunday, May 13th. As we have not yet received the new schedule, it is impossible to give the changes this week.

The Young People's Society of the M. E. church, will hold their next meeting on Monday evening. After the literary program, ice cream and cake will be served. Price 10c.

"Gaining Strength by the Way" subject of sermon at the Universalist church next Sunday morning at 10:30. In the evening at 7:30 a sermon on "Transitions." Text, 1 Cor. 15:35.

During a brief visit at Clinton the other day we called upon Postmaster Keyes and was glad to find him convalescing from his illness. A few warm days will restore him to health.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. church will convene for the regular monthly meeting, Wednesday, May 16th. Business meeting at 4 P. M. Supper served by Mrs. Vedder's committee. All are cordially invited.

An entertainment will be given in the Opera House the first of June, under the auspices of the different churches. America, Scotland, Sweden Spain, Japan and Russia, will be represented in costumes. Supper served, also musical and literary program. Proceeds for replenishing the W. C. T. U. treasury.

Wm. Grimm, an employee at Henry Smith's paper mill met with a severe accident last Monday morning. While working near the beater shaft his shirt sleeve caught in the pulley and drew his right arm around, breaking it and tearing the flesh off below the elbow. It was feared that his arm would have to be amputated, but it was set and will probably mend all right.

The New York Evening Post commenced last week the publication of a weekly edition which will be devoted chiefly to tariff reform. It will be ably edited and will contain much valuable information on the tariff question, taken as far as possible from original sources. Every voter who wishes to post himself on the tariff—and who does not?—should take the weekly Post during the campaign. Subscriptions will be received at this office for six months at fifty cents.

Three more wheels will soon be added to the Tecumseh Bicycle Club.

Jud DePuy, of Detroit, spent last Sunday with Tecumseh acquaintances.

A. W. Slayton has been in Northern Michigan, since Monday, looking after his lumber business there.

Arrangements have been completed for a series of out door band concerts this summer. The first concert will be given next Saturday evening.

The committees appointed to make arrangements for the Union Farmer's Picnic met at the HERALD office last Saturday afternoon, and adjourned until Saturday, June 2d.

We understand that E. L. Mills, of Adrian, is a candidate for sheriff on the Republican ticket. He is well qualified for the position and would make a strong candidate.

Albert Anderson has sold his interest in the grocery store to his sons, who will hereafter conduct the business under the firm name of Anderson Bros. The young men are both business hustlers, thoroughly posted in that line of trade and they will undoubtedly build up a large and lucrative business. Here's success to the new firm.

An Ex-Sheriff of Lenawee County, who is a zealous Republican, was chosen one of the delegates to the state convention which met Tuesday at Grand Rapids. Owing to his enthusiasm for Gen. Alger or some other cause he got the date entered on his memorandum book one week too early and lit out for Grand Rapids last week, not discovering his mistake until his arrival there.

The programme for the fifteenth annual meeting of the association of superintendents of schools of the state has been issued. The sessions will be held at Lansing, May 10 and 11. Supt. D. A. Hammond, of Tecumseh, is down for the discussion of a paper on "Recess, or no recess," and Supt. Geo. W. Walker, of Adrian, will enlarge upon the subject of "Manual training."

At a meeting of the Common Council last Monday evening, a resolution was passed to number the streets of the village, and all stores, shops and residences should be provided with the proper number. This is a good move. Something of the kind has been needed for a long time. Mr. Eddy is in town prepared to take orders for numbers, of which he has several different styles on hand. Our citizens should avail themselves of this opportunity to comply with the recommendations of the Council at once.

The Higby mill is again undergoing repairs. This time the pulleys are being so changed as to be run with rope, instead of belting as heretofore. A dollar's worth of rope will do the work of twenty five dollars' worth of belting, and it is claimed more power can be obtained from the hemp, than can be got from the leather, as there is not so much slip to it. The alterations already made give satisfaction and others are under way.—Adrian Times.

In the May number of Woman, Julia Ward Howe has a thoughtful paper on "How to Extend the Sympathies of Women," in which she shows how true education enlarges the natural limits of feminine character, and urges women to emancipate themselves from intellectual narrowness. The first paper on Woman's Clubs, by Olive Thorne Miller, is finely illustrated with engravings of the prominent members of Sorosis and the Meridian Clubs, which form the subject of this article. Price $2.75 a year. Woman Publishing Co., N. Y.

The Montana Reservation Bill having now become a law opens for settlement four million acres rich farming lands in the well-known and long coveted Milk River Valley, also large areas of excellent grazing country on the surrounding uplands. This portion of Montana, besides its agricultural resources being rich in minerals with an abundance of coal, is attracting wide spread attention as is shown by the number already settling there. C. H. Warren, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn., has issued for free distribution, an excellent map, and a pamphlet with other information regarding this country. Low rates are now being made to Great Falls for those desiring to explore this new country.

Wide Awake for May is as bright as a May morning. The beautiful frontispiece (after Steffeck's famous painting) shows the late Emperor William and his brother when boys, in company with their famous mother, Queen Louise. A brief article about the Emperor, with a portrait from his last life photograph is timely. "President Madison's Family," with its beautiful portraits of Dolly Madison and other members of the family, is very chatty and entertaining. These glimpses into the home life of the children of our presidents, appeal forcibly to every American boy and girl. Newsdealers have this issue for 20 cents, or it will be mailed by the publishers, D. Lothrop Company, Boston. A sample back number of any of the Lothrop magazines costs but 5 cents, or of the four for 15 cents.

Mr and Mrs. Sam Janes, of Detroit, are in town.

Don't forget the oranges next week Friday, May 18th.

[illegible] parties at Flat Rock?

Frank Hall is home from Agricultural college on a short vacation.

Abner Wilson sold the Celery Co. 5000 early celery plants this week.

Push the base ball club, gentlemen. It is high time you were getting to work.

I. P. Keyser has moved to Jackson, where he will engage in the celery business.

There was a big crowd at the Mackinaw gravel pit again last Sunday afternoon.

G. P. Sparks and wife started for Baxter Springs, Kansas, last Tuesday, where they expect to remain.

The Girl's Aid Society, of St. Peter's church, will give an orange social on Friday evening, May 18th. Further particulars next week.

"Closed for invoice" has been posted in Coddington's windows for the past few days, and it is rumored that Mr. Coddington will sell his stock to Adamson Bros.

NORTHERN LENAWEE FARMERS' CLUB.

The first meeting of the Ladies' of the Northen Lenawee Farmers' Club, was held at the home of Horatio Keyser, Wednesday afternoon, April 18. Mrs. O. P. Remington, presiding.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. In the absence of the Secretary, Mrs. S. P. Sheldon was appointed to act until Aug. A motion was made and carried to hold another meeting in four weeks with Mrs. L. Mangus. Owing to the absence of a number who were to have furnished entertainment, the literary program was short. An address was made by our new and very worthy President, Mrs. O. P. Remington, which was both interesting and appropriate. This was followed by a song, after which an essay was read by Mrs. S. P. Sheldon, subject, Farmers' Wives. After another song, a select reading was given by Mrs. W. B. Keyser. Mrs. Welch also gave a fine reading, which afforded us much comfort as she proved that Adam was not guiltless and Eve was not guilty of all she has been accused.

The Question, "What is the best way of raising and feeding poultry, and does it pay?" was led by Mrs. J. F. N. Bowen. She gave us many practical hints and suggestions. She thought a mansard roof and plate glass front were not necessary to produce a large amount of eggs, but comfortable and well ventilated quarters, with a variety of food and plenty of drink. She considered their drink an important part of their diet. If they must scratch for either food or drink, let it be their food. Then followed a lively and interesting talk, each giving some good, practical hints. The conclusion arrived at was, that for the money invested, there is more money in poultry than other stock. The following is the program for next meeting:

Sec. Read.—Mrs. M. G. Updyke.
Rec.—Mrs. J. F. N. Bowen.
Singing—
Essay—Mrs. Horatio Keyser.
Sec. Read.—Mrs. O. G. Smith.
Charade.
Dialogue—Ina Mangus and Ora Bowen.
Singing.
Question:—Which is the most economical for a farmer's wife to use, sale or rag carpets? Opened by Mrs S. P. Sheldon and Mrs. K. A. Welch.

Mrs. S. P. Sheldon, Sec.

OBITUARY.

In the death of Alvinza S. Doty, Tecumseh loses an old and respected resident. His family had resided in Tecumseh for the past eighteen years, and during a portion of that time the deceased had been engaged in business here with good success. He has been a sufferer from Bright's disease several months past, and finally disposed of his drug store on that account. Since then he seemed to improve somewhat until recently, when he grew worse, and departed this life on the 1st of May, being nearly sixty years of age. The funeral services were held on the 3d inst, and the remains were taken to Manchester his former home for interment. He leaves a devoted wife and one daughter, the wife of Dr. Jarvis of Ontario.

Mrs. Wm. H. Waring died at her home in Farmington, Ill., on Saturday, May 5th, of valvular heart disease, aged 35 years. The deceased was for many years a resident of Tecumseh where she spent her earlier life. She was united in marriage to Mr. Wm. H. Waring, on the 10th day of December, 1878. The family lived in Tecumseh until April 1884, when they removed to Illinois, which state has since been their home. The remains were brought to Tecumseh for interment, and appropriate services were held here on Tuesday last. The deceased had many old acquaintances in Tecumseh who will learn of her early death with sincere regret and will sympathise with the bereaved husband in his misfortune.

An Expression of Gratitude.

To all those, who from hearts of pure sympathy, have for the past 11 months, administered unto the varied necessities and extreme sufferings of our dear departed,—we can but invoke the blessing of Him who saith: "Verily, ye shall in no wise lose your reward."

Addison Past No. 277 G. A. R. have wisely decided to conduct appropriate memorial services on the 30th inst. Eminent speakers from abroad will be present, and all necessary preparations made to insure the success of the occasion. Let all who favor the move assist in arranging its details, and make the day one long to be remembered. Program and particulars later.—Addison Courier.

It is now expected the work of securing subscriptions to the stock of the Dundee Fuel Gas Company will be completed during the next three or four days, or that the question of a well or no well will be determined. An important change has been ordered in the railway mail service on the Fayette branch. The postal clerk will run on the train, going over in the morning, and returning at 4 P. M. instead of leaving at 9 P. M., as now, spending the night in Fayette. The evening train will take the pouch for Jasper, Ogden, Weston, Morenci and Fayette, and each of these offices will pouch on at 12 in the morning. This change was secured through the courtesy of F. B. Dodge, to whom postmaster Stearns applied some time since.—Adrian Press.

At the time of the State encampment, held at Lansing over a month ago, Supervisor Bay, of Ogden, purchased three barrels of potatoes of a grocery firm there, giving orders to ship within ten days. They failed to come to hand and letters written also failed to give any satisfactory explanation. Last Monday morning the Supervisor boarded the train for Lansing with blood in his eye. He hadn't been gone more than two or three hours, when the freight came in having on board the potatoes. He didn't exactly kick himself all the way back, but he felt as if he wanted to. The trip nearly doubled the cost of the potatoes.—Blissfield Advance.

There is one little fellow in Morenci who has not studied history merely for a pastime. He remembers what he reads. The following essay on "Christopher Columbus" is the product of his mighty brain: "Clumbus was a man who could make an egg stand on end without breaking it. The King of Spain said to Clumbus: 'Can you discover America?' 'Yes,' said Clumbus, 'if you will give me a ship.' So he got a ship and sailed over the sea in the direction where he thought America ought to be found. The sailors quarreled and said there was no such place. But after many days the pilot came to him and said: 'Clumbus, I see land.' 'That is America,' said Clumbus. When the ship got near, the land was full of black men. Clumbus said: 'Is this America?' 'Yes, it is,' they said. Then the chief said: 'I suppose you are Clumbus?' 'You are right,' said he. Then the chief turned to his men and said: 'There is no help for it: we are discovered at last."

Resolutions of the Death of Comrades Dewitt Henders ot and Huble Middlebrook.

WHEREAS, During the year two comrades, Dewitt Hendershot and Huble Middlebrook, of Beers' Post, No. 140, G. A. R. Tecumseh, Mich., have been mustered out of the army of human life; and are now encamped in the peaceful plains of Heaven. They are still missed from our ranks and camp fires. They no longer respond to roll call or join with us in voices of the flesh as we sing our evening odes or offer our evening prayer, or chant together the stirring songs we used to sing in days of conflict, and now in these of victory and a nation's peace. Be it therefore,

Resolved, That we give expression to our sorrow, extend our sympathy to those, who love them and mourn their departure, and keep them in perpetual remembrance, not only upon the pages of our souls, but spread upon the records of the Adjutant's Minutes of this post. This offering as of their Loyalty, Fraternity and Charity. Hallowed forever be their friendship, their patriotism and their love for liberty. Blessed be their memory enshrined within our hearts and the homes of earth, until we all meet again in the supreme Grand Army above.

CHRIST BEFORE PILATE.

This truly great painting by Munkacsy, the famous Hungarian artist, has at last reached Chicago, and is on where it can be seen during the day and evening.

It measures 18x25 feet including the frame, and contains nearly forty life-size figures.

The memorable trial of Jesus before the Roman Governor is certainly portrayed by a master hand, and when gazing at the picture as it stands draped on the stage in the large hushed hall, one almost waits to hear words issue from the canvas, so very realistic does the scene appear. There is no doubt whatever about this being the work of Munkacsy and the veritable painting for which one hundred thousand dollars was paid by its present owner. The painting itself is the best argument for its being the original.

At the same time and place may be seen a very beautiful work by Piloty, The Wise and Foolish Virgins. It, like the Christ Before Pilate, is well worthy of careful and intelligent study. Both these wonderful works of art are attracting great attention, and our readers who visit Chicago on business or pleasure should not fail to see them. The Exhibition will be open for some weeks.

HOMELY GIRLS AT A PREMIUM.

The Type-Writers Who Soonest Procure

At one of the principal type-writing [illegible] New York can often see as many as eight or ten young women on the benches in the outer office waiting to see the proprietor, of whom they want to get employment as pupils or secretaries to business men. The other day I went to that school and I witnessed the neglect of a plain girl, who evidently found it difficult to conceal her mortification. I was in the room with the proprietor when he asked her to come in.

"I suppose there is no use my asking you, sir," she said, "but I will say that I am seeking occupation as a type-writer."

"Do you understand the business?" he asked.

"I am said to be very rapid," she said. "I have been five years at the calling."

"Will you accept $15 a week to act as stenographer and type-writer to Vice-President So-and-so, of the —— Company?"

"Fifteen dollars!" she said. "I only got ten, sir, and then only for a year, before the firm I was with failed."

The arrangement or bargain was quickly made. Before she left, the girl asked: "Will you tell me why you saw me last, though I was the first to come?"

"I'd rather not," said the employer.

"Did all the others secure places?"

"No one but you was taken," he said.

She went away wondering. When she had gone the proprietor turned to me and said: "That is both a sensitive and sensible girl. She thought she was left to the last because her face and dress are plain. She is right. This is the day of the homely girl. The beauty, the belle, the dressy girl are all at a discount in this business, and we have resolved never to employ another pretty girl if we can get a homely one.

"There's no mystery about it," he continued. "It's plain business. There are now six or seven thousand girls at work in men's offices down town, and, while their entree into commercial life is always spoken of as a feminine revolution, the truth is that it has created a social stir deeper than either one sex has felt. When girls were first made use of on account of their quickness with their hands, the suitability of the work, and the low price at which they could be got by reason of the large number seeking work, the craze was for pretty girls. Now all that is changed. I can show you scores of letters in which business men ask me not to send a pretty girl. The reason is as plain as the nose on your face," he continued; "the wives have interfered. Every married man is visited at his office by his wife more or less frequently. If she finds him elbow to elbow or face to face with a pretty coquette every time she comes, she is certain to make life more or less unpleasant for him. Some women in such cases 'take it out' at home, as the saying goes, and I have heard men tell me that their wives were forever popping in on them, and practically never missed a day without a call at their offices. These business men nearly all pick up a bouquet or box of candy or some little knicknack now and then to gladden the life of the girl at their elbow. Imagine the state of the wife who finds that the flowers she sees on her husband's desk were put there by him, when he has told her ten thousand times that he has hated flowers from infancy! Oh, no; there is no show for the pretty girl in business in New York. Those who got places long ago are being crowded out, and no new ones are now taken on."

THE BANSHEE'S WARNING.

A Curious Creature That Told a Man of His Mother's Death.

Michael Phelan, the vigilant night watchman at the Planters' House, tells some queer stories of his experience in Ireland before he decided to emigrate:

"Once I saw a banshee. It was many years ago, in Kings county, Ireland, about forty miles from Dublin. During the summer months there the twilight is very long, and late one afternoon, when the sun had gone down, I happened to walk over to the farm of a man named Michael Burns. Well, as we stood and talked my friend suddenly said: 'Mike, do you want to see a banshee?' Of course I did, and when I looked where he pointed, sure enough, there in the lane, creeping along near the hedge was a wee bit of a thing not more than three feet high. It looked like a little girl, only its hair, which was long and yellow, fell down its back clear to the ground, and as it crept along it whimpered and moaned just like a child in pain. My friend looked very grave, saying: 'That's a family banshee, and I'm afraid some of my relations are going to be sick.'

"Pretty soon I left, but not before a neighbor had come riding up, and told my friend to make haste as his mother had been taken very ill. The next day I learned that the poor woman had died before her son reached her. Oh, the banshees are queer things, and they never let any one come near them. Another man I knew came across one sitting in a cornfield, near the fence. When he suddenly appeared it ran out of sight among the corn, but it dropped its comb from its yellow hair, and the man picked it up and put it in his pocket. That night the banshee came near the house and whined so piteously that the man dropped the comb out of the window. The banshee then left, and when a search was made next morning it was found that the comb had disappeared too." St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Rocky Mountain Confidence Man.

Dr. Boggs, the most notorious confidence man of the Rocky Mountain region, was in Philadelphia recently on his way west. Boggs, who invented the "gold brick" device for fleecing tenderfeet, made a fortune in Denver, Col., by bunco games of various kinds.

He is now forty-five years of age, and he says that he has reformed. He has so far advanced in the scale of morality that he now devotes himself to the philanthropic career of bookmaker on the race tracks. He is a handsome, well-educated man, with a dangerously pleasing address.

No Cause for Alarm.

"Have I done anything to offend you, darling," he asked, brokenly. "To-day you passed me without bowing, and now you sit there with such an air of hauteur and pride that —"

"George," interrupted the girl with the unbending air, but in her voice there was a cadence sweeter than music in the night, "I have a stiff neck." (New York Sun.

SOME FIGHTING QUAKERS.

Amusing Stories of Philadelphia Friends of the Revolutionary Period.

Many anecdotes of the early Quakers are [illegible] to show how even under Penn's rule the impulses of human nature occasionally asserted their rigid laws of duty and submission. Not a few of the young men of Quaker families served in the Revolutionary army and in the navy in 1812 and wore on the battle field their broad-brimmed hats and shad-bellied coats.

It is said that one of these young "fighting Quakers," as they were called, met his father on the street on his return home. The old man laid his hand rebukingly on his son's arm, saying: "The wool in thy coat was sheared from my sheep and woven in thy mother's loom, yet there is blood on it."

"And the blood is thy blood," boldly replied the young man. "If thou hadst been 20 instead of 60, thou, too, wouldst have fought under Washington."

"Zachariah!" stammered the old man. "It may be so, Zachariah, Thou hadst better go in to the dinner."

A well known story is that of a Friend who was in a sailing vessel boarded by a British press-gang in 1812. He paced the deck with folded arms during the fight, until he saw one of the assailants climbing on deck by means of a cable.

"Friend, dost thou want that rope?" he said, calmly, hurrying up, knife in hand. "Thou shalt have it," and he cut it. The man dropped into the sea.

A better authenticated story is that of a grave old Quaker, two of whose sons went into the late civil war without his knowledge. The youngest son was fired, as was almost every other young man at that time, from Maine to Florida with the wish to give his life for the cause which he believed just. He had accepted a commission, but he did not wish to go without his father's consent.

He took occasion to make his preparations rather ostentatiously in his father's sight, laid out his officer's uniform, and tried to attract attention, but all in vain. As a last resort he seated himself in the room where the old man was pacing up and down, and began to polish his sword.

His father watched him, with a face growing paler and with dim eyes. At last he went up to the young man and said, quietly: "Samuel, if thee thinks thee must use one of those tools, buy the best and—I will pay for it, Samuel."

A MASTIFF WORTH HAVING.

How an Intelligent and Gallant Dog Saved a Lady's Life.

During a stay of the past five months at the home of friends at Fordham, says a Brooklyn lady correspondent, my chosen companion in my walks has been an English mastiff, the property of Frank Spencer, who has kindly allowed me the escort of Gyp. His dogship has before manifested many tokens of unusual intelligence, but one of Sunday last is, I think, worthy of honorable mention. Possessing naturally a venturesome disposition, that has often got me into scrapes, I ventured to the extreme limit of our beautiful grounds, over into a turnip field, to investigate some queer looking objects on the opposite side, which I afterward learned were abandoned beehives. I made my way bravely through the snow left by the blizzard and had nearly reached my goal, when I unfortunately stepped off on a treacherous piece of ground, and down I went in the mud. Vainly I struggled to regain my feet, I only sank deeper in the mire.

After expressing his sympathy in every way that a dog could, Gyp mounted on an eminence, sniffing the air in every direction, looking evidently for some one who could lend me a helping hand but not a person was in sight. Mournfully (it seemed to me then) our bell rang out in the distance its ever welcome sound for dinner. Visions for our bountiful board gave new impetus to the energy with which I struggled to rise, but still in vain. Gyp seemed to seriously consider for a moment, and then, standing close at my side he looked expressively in my face, and then at his back, repeating this several times in succession. I understood that he was urging me to lean for assistance on his back, which I did, the brave dog meanwhile standing immovable. Failing, however, with this help, I was about to hopelessly give it up, when he changed his position, again urging me in the same expressive way to try once more, which I did, this time successfully, when his joy knew no bounds. Neither Gyp nor I are any worse for our escapade, but I am done with turnip fields forever.

Edwin Forrest's Secret.

That great tragedian, Forrest, had a secret which everybody ought to learn and profit by. Said he, "I owe all success to the fact that everything I have undertaken I have done thoroughly. I never neglect trifles." That's the point—don't neglect trifles. Don't neglect that hacking cough, those night-sweats, that feeble and capricious appetite, and the other symptoms, trifling in themselves, but awful in their significance. They herald the approach of consumption. You are in danger, but you can't be saved. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will restore you to health and vigor, as it has thousands of others. For all scrofulous diseases, and consumption is one of them, it is a sovereign remedy.

Most everything in this world is full of decention. Few things are what they seem, but the results obtained for Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic far exceed all claims. It restores lost nerve force, cures dyspepsia, and all stomach, liver, kidneys and bladder troubles. It is a perfect tonic, appetiser, blood purifier, a sure cure for ague and malarial diseases. Price 50 cents. at Dr. Geo. Furguson.

Rheumatism is caused by an acid in the blood; therefore, external treatment affords no permanent relief. To eliminate the poison and make a thorough cure of the disease, nothing else is so efficient as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Give it a trial. Price $1. Worth $5 a bottle.

Itch, mange, and scratches of every kind on human or animals cured in 30 minutes by Woodford's Sanitary Lotion. This never fails. Sold by Baker & Hall, Druggists, Tecumseh Mich.

Babies that are fretful peevish, cross, or troubled with Windy Colic, Teething Pains, or Stomach Disorders, can be relieved at once by using Acker's Baby Soother. It contains no Opium or Morphine, hence is safe. Price 25 cents. Sold by C. A. WRIGHT & CO., Druggists.

CLARA, how is the baby? Oh, he is as chipper as a lark. That Hobbard's Throat and Lung Balsam is a great remedy. Three doses relieved his suffering, and he was ready for play.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

TO THE EDITOR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their express and post office address. Respectfully,

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, on the 11th day of [illegible] mortgaged to Addison Hardenburg, all that parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, in the county of Lenawee and State of Michigan, described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point in the east line of Pearl street ten (10) rods north of the [illegible] parallel with and ten (10) rods distant from [illegible] street about ten (10) rods to the Railway Depot Grounds; thence north, yard on west line of said Depot Grounds about six (6) rods to lands of Heesen Brothers and Nyland, or at least occupied by them as a Hog Hinger Factory; thence west on south line of said land of Heesen Brothers and Nyland two (2) rods more or less to land conveyed by said Samuel W. Temple and wife, Hettie A., to Edwin Wood; thence south on east line of said land, so as aforesaid conveyed to said Wood two (2) and one-half (2½) rods to the southeast corner thereof; thence west on south line of said parcel of land so as aforesaid conveyed to said Wood eight (8) rods to the east line of Pearl street aforesaid; thence south on east line of said Pearl street to place of beginning, with all the appurtenances thereto belonging or in anywise appertaining or thereupon situated, including the machinery in and about the buildings thereon or to be hereafter annexed to the same or any part thereof, to secure the payment of $253.60 in five years from the date thereof, with interest to be paid annually at the rate of ten per cent. per annum for the first three years, and for the remaining two years interest to be paid annually at the rate of nine per cent. per annum, which mortgage was, on the 11th day of October, 1883, duly recorded in office of Register of Deeds for said county of Lenawee in Liber 93 of mortgages on page 335 and 340. And whereas said mortgage contains a provision that in event any default shall be made in the payment of said interest, or any part thereof at the time therein specified, and shall remain in arrears for the space of sixty days the aforesaid principal sum with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of said mortgagee, his executors, administrators and assigns, become due and payable. And whereas default has been made in the payment of interest on said mortgage to the amount of $35.66-100 and upwards and the same having remained unpaid and in arrears for a space of more than sixty days, and the undersigned, administratrix, hereby elects to declare and does hereby declare the whole amount due, both principal and interest, amounting at the date of this notice to the sum of $3180.82 100, and no proceedings having been commenced at law or in equity for the recovery of said sum or any part thereof. And whereas the undersigned administratrix has been compelled to pay the further sum of $96.37-100 for insurance premiums to protect her interest as such administratrix in the mortgaged premises.

Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and by virtue of the statutes of the State of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the moneys so due and owing on said mortgage, and the interest thereon from and after the date of this notice, said insurance premiums and interest thereon, as provided in said mortgage, and the cost and expense of this foreclosure, and the attorney fee provided by law; the said above described lands and premises will be sold at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of the Court House in the city of Adrian in said County of Lenawee (that being the place where the circuit court for said county of Lenawee is holden) on Saturday, the 26th day of May, A.D. 1888, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day.

Dated March 1st, 1888.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage made and executed on the third day of June, 1886, by the Ohio & Michigan Coal and Manufacturing Company to Addison Hardenburg, and recorded on the 4th day of June, 1886, in office of Register of Deeds for the county of Lenawee, Michigan, in Liber 117 of mortgages, on page 74, by virtue of which said default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas there is claimed to be due and owing at the date of this notice upon the said mortgage and note accompanying same for principal and interest the sum of $287.50, and whereas the undersigned administratrix has been compelled to pay the further sum of $16.75, for insurance premiums to protect her interest in the mortgaged premises, and whereas no suit or proceedings at law or in equity have been instituted to recover such indebtedness secured to be paid by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the monies so due and owing on said mortgage, and interest from and after the date thereof, said insurance premiums and interest thereon, and the cost and expense of this foreclosure, the attorney fee provided by law, the undersigned will sell at public vendue to the highest bidder on the 19th day of May, A.D., 1888, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the front door of the court house in the city of Adrian in said county of Lenawee, (that being the place where the circuit court for said county of Lenawee, is holden) the lands and premises described in said mortgage, viz: All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, in the county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point or intersection of the north line of Shawnee street with the west line of the Jackson Branch of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad company in said village, thence north at right angles with said Shawnee street, thirty-seven (37) feet; thence northerly on westerly line of said Railroad lands to the northeast corner of a parcel of land formerly owned by Alpheus Stearns, and more recently owned by S. W. Temple; thence west on south line of Railroad depot grounds twelve rods to land formerly owned by Emma Temple; thence south on east line of said land formerly owned by said Emma Temple, as aforesaid about ten rods to the north line of Shawnee street aforesaid; thence east on north line of Shawnee street aforesaid thirteen rods and fourteen and one-half feet to place of beginning.

MORTGAGE SALE.

BY a certain mortgage bearing date the 30th day of March, A.D. 1880, executed by Charles T. Watson and Anna R. Watson, his wife, to Lewis Smith and George Ferguson, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Lenawee county, state of Michigan, on the 31st day of March, A.D., 188[illegible], in Liber 102 of Mortgages on page 58, they mortgage to said Lewis Smith and George Ferguson, all that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Deerfield, county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, described as follows, to wit: Lot number thirty-nine (39) and Tray Factory lot, said lots are bounded as follows: On the north by Main street, on the east by Raisin street, on the south by Jason alley, on the west by lot owned by Munson (said lot now owned by Frank Deitz); together with all of the machinery belonging and in possession on said premises. Said mortgage was on the 5th day of May, A.D. 1881, duly assigned by Lewis Smith and George Ferguson to William K. Choate and said assignment was recorded in the office of Register of Deeds, for Lenawee county aforesaid, on the 7th day of February, A.D., 1888 in Liber 118 of Mortgages on page 252. Default has been made in the condition of said mortgage, whereby the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is now claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of three hundred sixty-three 96-100 dollars ($363.96) and no suit or proceedings at law or chancery has been instituted to collect the same or any part thereof. Notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgaged premises will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder on the 14th day of May, A.D., 1888, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, at the east front door of court house of said county, in the city of Adrian, in said county, said court house being the place of holding the circuit court of said county of Lenawee, to satisfy the amount then due together with all legal costs and charges of this foreclosure.

Dated Feb. 14, A.D. 1888.

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

[illegible] and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more

Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON FOR MAY 13th, 1888.

NOTES.—"The first day of unleavened bread."—Not the fifteenth day of Nisan, when the Mosaic law calls the Passover, but the fourteenth, which being a preparation day, and a day in which the leavened bread was all put away, come to be called the first day.——"Go into the city."—Jesus had been spending two days, Wednesday and Thursday, in retirement at Bethany.——"To such a man."—Name not given. He was probably a friend, to whom Jesus had previously spoken, the same man whose servant would be met carrying a pitcher of water.——"The Master saith."—This implies that the man knew Christ.——"At thy house."—Many Jews allowed the hospitality of their home to visitors from the country——"Made ready the passover."—Provided the lamb, unleavened bread, wine, etc.——"He that dipped his hand."—Not "dippeth," as in the Revised Version. Probably only one or two heard it, and Judas was not one of them."——As it is written of him."—As in Is. lii, and the Messianic prophecy generally.——"Is it I, Rabbi?"—Is it noticeable that Judas does not call Christ his Master, but by the less affectionate term of Rabbi.——"Thou hast said."—That is it is as you have said.——"As they were eating."—It is probable that Judas went out before the Lord's Supper was instituted.——"This is my body."—It represents my body. As this loaf is broken shall my body be broken.——"This is my blood of the covenant."——This wine represents the blood of Christ, the shedding of which is the seal of the new covenant whereby God and man are brought into a new relationship of pardon. The old covenant was of obedience rewarded with life; this is of sin forgiven by grace.——"For many."—For the whole world. It is not implied that there are many others for whom the blood was not shed.——"Unto remission of sins."—The implication is that but for the shedding of Christ's blood there would have been no remission——"I will not drink henceforth," etc.—This is my last meal with you until the victory of his kingdom; but what is meant exactly, and when it should be, was not clearly stated.——"A hymn." Probably the so-called hallel with which the Jews finished the passover feast, Ps. cxv cxviii, including the passage, "Bind the sacrifice with cords."

INSTRUCTION.—Christ was above all ceremonial law, yet he obeyed it. He ate the passover; he was baptized. He did it "to fulfill all righteousness." We should hold the forms of worship even when we think we might get as much good elsewhere.

One in the original twelve betrayed his Master. There is reason to fear more than that number do it now. Every man betrays him who, professing to be a disciple, lives a selfish, worldly life.

The men who betray Christ are not the ones to ask "Is it I?" Probably Judas would not have asked if the others had not. And he did not feel badly about it. They asked in anxiety; he asked carelessly, and went out to complete the work.

A man's sins are utterly his free act. He is fully responsible for them. To be punished for them is just. No foreknowledge of God, or plan of the universe, affects his responsibility. There may be question as to decrees, but there can be no question of freedom.

The consequences of sin are terrible. It is better for a man not to have been born than that he should live a willfully sinful life, and die in his sins.

The Church of Christ is based, as an organization, on the Lord's Supper. But for that it would have perished. That holds believers together. Before this there were scattered disciples; now there was a church.

The Lord's supper is primarily a memorial service. "Do this in remembrance of me." There is no mystical power in it. If it helps us to remember that Christ died for us, then it has accomplished its end.

The Lord's Supper is for all Christ's disciples. It is a disgrace to the Church that symbol of unity should have been so often made the sign of division.

Read Psalm cxviii to know what Christ chanted with his disciples after the Lord's Supper, and on his way to Gethsemane and the Cross. It was about the stone rejected by the builders, the sacrifice, bound with cords, his own imminent death, and yet it ended with thanksgiving and praise. "For the joy that was set before him he endured the cross."

Your Friend Committed Suicide.

You never suspected it, none of his friends dreamed of it, he did not know it himself, but it is exactly what he did, nevertheless. Do you remember his sallow complexion? Do you recollect how he used to complain of headaches and constipation? "I'm getting quite bilious," he said to you one day, "but I guess it'll pass off. I haven't done anything for it, because I don't believe in dosing." Soon after that you heard of his death. It was very sudden, and every one was greatly surprised. If he had taken Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets he would be alive and well to-day. Don't follow his example. The "Pellets" are easy to take, mild in their action, and always sure.

[illegible] OF SURGERY.

Illustrated in an Operation of Great Difficulty and Danger.

A correspondent describes in a graphic manner an operation performed at the City Hospital, Boston, by Dr. Cheever. [illegible] man about 30 years, who was afflicted [illegible] growth in the front part of the upper jaw.

He was placed before the class in a surgical chair, as it was necessary that he should be in a sitting position. The chair has an adjustable back and head rest, and is provided with straps which hold the patient in place, and with wristbands which confine the hands.

On account of the location of the malady it was of course impossible to etherize the patient and to operate at the same time. The effects of ether remain for several minutes, and by the alternate work of the surgeon and use of the ether cone the operation was completed without pain to the patient.

There was very little external manifestations of the trouble, only a rather noticeable prominence of the upper jaw.

Dr. Cheever first severed the upper lip vertically to the nose. From cutting first to one side and then the other, he made incisions out and up diagonally part way across each cheek. The severed upper lip and part of the cheek was then dissected up from the bone on each side; thus uncovering a large section of the upper jaw. It was necessary to uncover the bone a little above this point, and it was done by cutting underneath the lower part of the nose and lifting up that organ.

Then began the work of removing the diseased bone. Two or three teeth on each side were extracted. With a small saw the surgeon cut through the bone from right to left, at a point behind where the lower part of the nose belonged. The jawbone was then cut vertically on each side with a pair of bone forceps, at a point just back of where the eye teeth had been located, and the diseased portion was severed. The operation involved removing a large portion of the roof of the mouth in front, and what is perhaps the most prominent bone in the face.

Like nearly all operations about the head—which is full of blood vessels—the operation had been attended with a great deal of hemorrhage, but the patient had borne it well.

The free incisions that had been made were closed up so deftly that scarcely a trace of them remained, and Dr. Cheever said the deformity might be almost overcome by wearing a plate in the mouth, on the plan of one made for false teeth.

Guided by a Dream.

Sir Josiah Mason, on the eve of the St. Leger, dreamed that a telegraph boy brought him a message which, on opening, he found to contain the names of three horses as first, second and third in the great race.

When he awoke he distinctly remembered the dream, and even the names of the horses. He was much impressed, and, though not accustomed to make bets, he resolved to put his vision to the test.

He accordingly backed the first on the list with all his available money, which was not much. It won. Not only so, but the other two horses came in exactly as they had been prefigured to him in his dream.—London Times.

How To Remove A Tight Finger-Ring.

The other day an old lady came to me with the request to saw a ring from one of her fingers. It was her wedding ring, which she had never had off since she was married, forty-five years before, and she was delighted to hear that I could remove it without cutting it.

I wound the finger round from the top downward with flat rubber braid, which seemed to push the flesh down to the bone. Her hand was then held above her head for a few moments. Then the bandage was quickly taken off and rewound on the finger.

After repeating this operation three times I was able to remove the ring with ease.—Jeweller's Weekly.

Puzzling the Horse Editor.

"Are you the horse editor?" inquired an innocent looking woman, approaching the desk of that functionary.

"I have that pleasure, Miss," he replied, taking off his hat.

"Can you answer all sorts of questions about horses?"

"Well, I rather think I can," he said, with a prideful swell in his bosom.

"Oh, I'm so glad," she twittered. "Will you tell me the difference between a bay horse and a sea horse?"

As she went out of the office she smiled back at him, but he sat gloomily at his desk and said nothing.—Washington Critic.

The Moor's Wonderful Turban.

With the exception of his boots there is only one thing in his costume that the Moor cannot make himself; that is his turban.

This wonderful piece of headgear is made of felt and camel's hair, and weighs about five pounds. No sword can cut through it; it is deliciously cool in summer and comfortably warm in winter, and at night it serves as a pillow. It lasts a lifetime and never wears out.

Cinders in the Eye.

In a conversation some time ago with a a Chicago oculist, a writer received some useful information about getting railroad cinders and other motes out of the eye, which, although it is not new, should be [illegible] traversing, that the inner surface of the eyelid [illegible] mote the moving of small particles toward the inner corners of the eyes, where the duct opens which leads into the nose.

This is the particular fact on which his advice is based, and which also shows the extreme folly of the method usually adopted to extract cinders from the eye. This method is to double up the forefinger, and gouge into the afflicted eye until it is red as a beet and suffused with tears. Some horrible contortions of the countenance are thrown in, as if to assist.

Now, the only effect that such a course can have is to grind the cinder into the corrugations of the eyelid, and keep it there for a week until the inflammation subsides. The proper way to do is to catch up the eyelid by the skin, and pull it away from the eyeball gently and repeatedly. This not only instantly relieves the pain, but promotes the shifting of the cinder in the right direction. In almost every case his will be found a speedy and painless remedy.

IT MATCHES WELL WITH CRAPE

The New Mourning Stone With Which the Rich Emphasize Their Grief.

Crape stone is a novel article used for jewelry to be worn by persons in mourning. Pins and brooches for fastening mourning garments have commonly been made of wood and covered with crape, but the invention of crape-stone has largely supplanted them in all parts of the world, and it is now made into almost every conceivable article of jawelry. The manufactory is in Rhode Island, where a large number of skilled artisans are employed. Crape-stone of the first class is made from onyx, which is cut with tools and abraded with acids to produce the crape-like corrugations. These are in series side by side, or grouped in divisions; they are practically parallel, either longitudinal, lateral or diagonal, and are sometimes waved, and the effect is perfected by the finer cross lines. The stone after being cut, is colored a lustreless black. The onyx used in the manufacture of these stones comes principally from the western territories, but a portion of the supply is from South America. The American stone is sent to Germany, where it is sawed into the desired sizes, cut, and prepared for the ornamentation. It is then returned to this country and subjected to the process at Providence.

The workman cuts each corrugation and the finer cross lines with the utmost care, after which the stone is subjected to the acid. Crape-stone perfectly matches with crape.

Why He Struck Him.

"Why did you strike the plaintiff?" was asked of a aprisoner in the police court the other day.

"Because he said I was no gentleman."

"Well, are you a gentleman?"

"I don't suppose I am, sir; but it made me mad to be told of it, all the same."

The Bells Rung by Steam.

Ringing the bells of a locomotive by steam is now effected by an ingenious apparatus, consisting of a small steam cylinder placed at one side of the bell-frame and resting on the boiler; the connecting rod, which connects the piston to a three-inch crank on the bell, is so constructed that it will vary its length according to the swing of the bell, thus removing any liability of knocking the cylinder out by the piston coming in contact with it.

Moravian Hymns.

The Moravians have no confession of faith, as such; but the doctrines which they uphold are embodied in a catechism and special litany, called the Easter morning litany. The ritual is decidedly liturgical in its character, and special services distinguish the festivals of the ecclesiastical year. The hymnology is rich, and church music of a high classical standard fully developed. Love feasts, in imitation of the gupae of apostolic times are celebrated.

Mamma (to her little boy). "Now, Bennie, if you'll be good and go to sleep, mamma'll give you one of Dr. Ayer's nice sugar-coated Cathartic Pills, next time you need medicine." Bennie, smiling sweetly, dropped off to sleep at once.

I had a severe attack of catarrh, and became so deaf I could not hear common conversation. I suffered terribly from roaring in my head. I procured a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm, and in three weeks could hear as well as I ever could, and now I can say to all who are afflicted with the worst of diseases, catarrh, take one bottle of Ely's Cream Balm and be cured. It is worth $1,000 to any man, woman or child suffering from catarrh.—A. E. Newman, Grayling, Mich.

People ask what is good for a cough or a cold, the mistake many make is in letting it run too long. Dr. Bigelow's Cough Cure, contains the good qualities of all the best cough remedies without the defects of any of them. A safe and speedy remedy for coughs, colds and all throat and lung troubles. Sold by Dr. Geo. Ferguson at 50 cents and $1. bottles. Healing to the lungs. Safe and pleasant for children.

A Distinguished Clergyman's Testimony.

Rev. R. M. Pickens, President of the Methodist Protestant Church of South Carolina, writes from Greenville:

"About four years ago I was attacked with what the physicians pronounced neuralgic rheumatism, accompanied with erysipelas. My appetite failed me entirely, and I had an intermitting pulse and very irregular pulsations of the heart. A terrible [illegible] came into my chest and shoulders [illegible] became so helpless that I could [illegible] transact business at all. The pain [illegible], and would sometimes pass [illegible] of my body to another. First [illegible] has broken out on my left leg [illegible] produced inch swelling [illegible] eighteen months afflicted me [illegible] of course used a great many [illegible] medicines, but nothing gave me [illegible] relief. I noticed a friend I [illegible] while taking the first bottle. I continued its use until I had taken about one dozen bottles, when I found myself sound and well again, with no sign of disease left except a stiffness in my hand, a result of the erysipelas. While taking the medicine I gained on an average two pounds of flesh per week. I think S.S.S. a valuable medicine, and I frequently recommend it to my friends."

GIRLS AND MOTHERS! READ THIS!

I wish to tell you of the case of a girl 16 years old, who had been sick with suppression two years. Her father had paid over $300 for doctor's [illegible] the worst countenance that I have [illegible], a ring of greenish yellow; she was emaciated, had constant bowel trouble, and had to take morphine every night in order to sleep at all. All who saw her thought she would die. Her parents said they had done all they could. I repeatedly urged them to try Zoa-Phora, but they were strongly prejudiced against "nostrums." Finally the mother said, "We must do something, and this is as likely to help her as anything." She and I persuaded the father to let the girl try it. As a result, in four months her functions were established and regular, and in six months she was the picture of health—a living wonder to all who had known her.

I could describe 20 other cases, not as wonderful as this, but still very remarkable cures.

KING OF THE BLOOD

The Most Thorough Purifier of the Blood Yet Discovered.

Cures all Humors, from a common blotch to the worst Scrofula.

It purifies the Blood.
It invigorates the Liver.
It regulates the Bowels.
It strengthens the stomach.
It gives vivacity in place of lassitude; cheerfulness in place of gloom, and robust vigor in place of debility.

Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Disordered Liver, Constipation, Nervous Affections, General Debility, in short all the numerous diseases and discomforts caused by impure blood are speedily conquered by this powerful corrector, the chief and sovereign of all ancient or modern medical discoveries.—KING OF THE BLOOD.

Its name is its best description as it is a royal dispenser of the blessings of health and vanquishes the foes that lurk in the blood.

It banishes PIMPLES, SALT RHEUM, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, FEVER SORES, and all SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

It checks CONSUMPTION in its early stages. It has frequently cured it when advanced.

It disperses TUMORS and CANCERS without the surgeon's knife.

It cures DROPSY, general or partial.

It cures FEMALE WEAKNESS and DISEASE.

It reduces in a safe and effectual manner all swellings, external or internal.

It eradicates the effects of Venerial Disease and Mineral Poisons and establishes a sound constitution.

Many certificates, much further information and full directions for using, will be found in the pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," in which each bottle is wrapped.

Price $1 per bottle or 6 bottles for $5, or 12 ounces, or 50 doses, sold by druggists in medicine.

If your druggist does not happen to have it on hand, request him to order a supply of it for you or it will be cheaper than for you to order direct of us, and less trouble.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

VILLAGE OF TECUMSEH, Mich
Council Room, May 7th, 1888, 7 P. M.

Regular session. Present the entire Council.

and Approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

On Cemetery—Committee reported recommending purchase of 100 white oak fence posts and 1200 ft. fence lumber, and call the attention of the Council to the fact of there being a hollow in the south west portion of the cemetery, filled with brush and rubbish, and recommend it be cleared out and that it be filled up by plowing and scraping. Accepted and adopted.

On fire and fire limits—Committee reports a leak in the water pipe so large that the constant running of the mill is insufficient to keep to exceed one foot of water in the old tank (the new tank is full) and kept shut off from the main and recommend that the Street Commissioner be directed to find and repair the leak. Accepted and adopted.

REPORTS OF OFFICERS.

Street Commissioner reports 34½ days team labor 14½ days by corporation team and 48 days hand labor in April. Accepted and filed.

Sexton reports 4 adult interments in April, with treasurer's receipt for $12 interment fees and $20 note by Robt. and Jas. Lowry purchase of cemetery lot) for approval. Accepted and filed and note approved.

NEW BUSINESS.

The following bills are presented and referred to finance committee: Jebiel Davidson, making assessment rolls, $25; Thos. Kyle, marshal, $5.15; C. F. Field, printing, $15.60; Garlinghouse Bros., services, $1; G. A. Slayton, bill rendered, $26.88; Wm. C. Jordan, street commissioner, $34; and the following for street labor: C. Patterson, $9.37; F. Herning, $5; Dell Hubbard, $25; Geo. Snell, $10; Jno. Hubbard, $5; Jas. O'Riley, $7.50; Wm. Powell, $5; W. S. Morse, $1.25; Wm. McKinney, $1.25.

A request from Beers' Post 140 G. A. R., was presented asking the privilege to surrender cemetery lots 9 and 28, block O, and that they be given lots 7 and 30, block O instead, and the privilege to close the alleys dividing their cemetery lots. Granted and deed directed issued for said lots 7 and 30, block O.

On motion the Street Commissioner was directed to at once proceed to lay 4 blocks of water pipe on Pearl street, employing a competent person to superintend the same.

Council then appointed Geo. W. Frazier and Albert Hyde st. members of the Board of Review.

The matter of opening Union street extension south to corporation line was discussed and on motion street commissioner was directed to ascertain for what price right of way may be purchased.

On motion and vote of the council the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved That the Common Council of the village of Tecumseh do hereby require that all residences and business places in said village be numbered by fastening figures of sufficient size to be readily discernable from the street, over the front entrance to such business place or residence, according to the following system: on streets running east and west, the buildings to be numbered eastward and westward from Evans street and north of Evans Creek eastward and westward from Mill street, odd numbers on left hand side and even numbers on right hand side; on streets running north and south, buildings to be numbered northward and southward from Chicago street, odd numbers on left hand and even numbers on right hand side; on Mill street the buildings to be numbered northward from the south end of said street, odd numbers on left hand side and even numbers on right hand side; all vacant lots to be given deferred numbers, and that the Council do hereby recommend property owners to employ Mr. E. W. Eddy to do such numbering.

On motion the marshal was instructed to inspect the sidewalks in the village reporting at next meeting those needing repairs or rebuilding.

Wm. C. Jordan tendered to the Council his resignation of the office of Street Commissioner, the same to take effect May 22d, 1888. Tabled till next regular meeting.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The Finance committee reported favorably upon all of the above claims. Accepted and adopted and orders directed drawn.

Council then adjourned.

The Odorous but Medicinal Onion.

For a cold in the chest there is no better specific, for most persons, than well boiled or roasted onions. They may not agree with every one, but to persons with good digestion they will not only be found to be a most excellent remedy for a cough, and the inflammation of the bronchial tubes which is usually the cause of the cough, but if taken at the outset of a cold they will usually break up what promised, from the severity of the attack, to have been a serious one. One medical writer advocates the eating of onions in the spring of the year at least once a week. Onions, he says, are invigorating and prophylactic beyond description. Further, I challenge the medical fraternity or any mother to point out a place where children have died from diphtheria or scarlatina anginosa, etc. where onions were freely used.

BY a certain indenture of mortgage bearing date the 7th day of January, A. D., 1887, executed by Hiram Smith of Madison township, county of Lenawee, and State of Michigan, to Frank N. Chamberlin of the same place, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Lenawee County, State of Michigan, on the 8th day of January, A. D., 1887, in Liber 117 of Mortgages, on page 379, the said Smith mortgaged to said Chamberlin all that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the city of Adrian, county of Lenawee and State of Michigan, described as follows, to wit: Lot number thirty-three (33) and the west one-half of lot number thirty-four (34) on the plat of James Berry's subdivision of Outlot 5 Reserved in the city of Adrian, as per the recorded plat thereof—excepting and reserving an alley eight (8) feet in width from off the west side of lot thirty-three (33) to be used in common with owner of premises next west of the premises herein conveyed for their mutual benefit and to be kept open so long as they or either may desire. Default has been made in the condition of said mortgage, whereby the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is now claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of Four Hundred and Thirty-Seven 33-100 dollars ($437.33) and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery have been instituted to collect the same or any part thereof. Notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgaged premises will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder on the 4th day of August, A. D. 1888 at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day at the east front door of the court house of said county in the city of Adrian, that being the place of holding the Circuit Court for said county of Lenawee, to satisfy the amount then due together with all legal costs and charges of this foreclosure.

Dated May 7, 1888.

FRANK N. CHAMBERLIN, may10 Mortgagee.

ESTATE OF SANFORD HAUSE.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee—ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office in the city of Adrian, on Wednesday, the 9th day of May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Sanford Hause, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Frederick B. Wood, administrator upon said estate, alleging for reasons in said petition set forth that it is necessary to have the time extended for the payment of the debts of said deceased and the settlement of said estate, and praying that the time be extended one year from this date, and for such further order as to this court shall seem just and proper.

It is ordered, That Monday, the 4th day of June next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered. That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

(A True Copy.)

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

The latest snow squall of the season made its appearance Monday at noon.

Remember your last chance to guess on the three hottest days the coming summer, will expire next week Friday.

W. L. Jones lost a very valuable work horse Monday night, after a few hours sickness.

Mr. and Mrs. William and daughter Daisy Riggs, went to Saline last week to attend the funeral of a niece.

We wish to extend our congratulations with the best of wishes for a long happy and prosperous life to Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Linn, who were united in marriage at the home of the bride, at Inkester, Mich., on the 9th inst.

Dr. and Mrs. Begal, of Holloway, were the guests of Dr. R. H. Nelson and family, Monday.

Rev. and Mrs. Benton returned from their visit of two weeks at Williamston, Friday evening east.

Our Base Ball team went to Clinton on Saturday and played the Clinton team and they got left with a scorn of 9 to 14 in favor of Clinton. The boys report a very fine time and say they were used like gentlemen by the Clinton team in every respect, and if nothing prevents, the Clinton team will meet our boys on their own diamond next Saturday, and it is hoped the best of order will be kept by all.

One morning last week two young men of leisure appeared on our streets and set up a game of chance in the way of folding a ten dollar bill and placing it in a ring, and for three dollars you could try your luck, but as the morning was rather chilly, and as David had made a supply of soap for the season the suckers were not to be seen, and the two nobbies took a southerly course for a warmer climate and a better show for suckers.

G. P. Waring, and Alexander Easlick attended the Prohibition State Convention held at Grand Rapids this week, as delegates from this district.

All communications over the C. T. line for Dr. D. W. Loree, sent to S. P. Smith or H. J. Williams will receive immediate attention by the Doctor.

W. H. Arner, delegate to Grand Rapids to the Democratic State convention last week, reports a large attendance and a big time.

There will be a meeting of the Prohibition Club at Cottage Hall next Monday, May 21st, at 1:30. A program consisting of short addresses, question box and new vocal music, will be presented. Prohibitionists all come and invite your friends.

YANK TO DOC.

Say Doc, did you hear that fearful and death like noise, followed by a streak of human composition flying through the twilight Saturday evening?

Doc. No, what was it?

Yank. Why, constable Helm was away and a little legal business had to be performed in the way of serving some attachment papers. So Tink was selected as the proper person to perform the fete, and after everything was in readiness, he went to the scene of action and immediately appeared flying through the air at the extreme end of a rope attached to a calf's neck, when a street parade with a variety of gymnasium pranks were executed to the general satisfaction of the small but appreciative audience that was present. The performances were presented on West and North streets. After two such entertainments with a buggy quadrille, the evening fete was at an end.

Tink thinks if he could have had an overcoat on and a foot more rope, he would have been sailing towards the north star at present, and hopes constable Helm will stay home hereafter and attend to the duties of his office in person.

NORTH EAST FRANKLIN.

Emma McCollum came home last week. She has been making an extended stay with her sister in Addison.

Grace Spaulding has nearly recovered from her late severe attack of peritonitis.

Mrs. David Monroe left Monday afternoon for a trip to England, where she will visit her mother, brothers and sister, and receive the legacy recently left her. She some expects her mother and sister to return with her.

Saturday the first match game of base ball took place on the home grounds between the Ridgeway and Clinton clubs. Notwithstanding it was terribly cold and windy fully 300 persons braved the elements and felt repaid, as it proved to be a very interesting game. The game opened with Ridgeways at the bat. The side was quickly retired as Bob struck out the first two at bat and the third man was thrown out at first. For Clintons, Palmer made a base hit, Sinclair a two bagger, but Coddling went out on a fly, to Wiggins and Walker and Rogers struck out. In the 2nd notwithstanding Bob struck out two men, Ridgeway got in two runs, while Clinton was blanked as Prof. Huston struck out Keyes, Muir and Larzelere. Both sides were blanked in the third, as was Ridgeway in the 4th, but Clinton scored one earned run on Walker's rattling three bagger and Keyes sacrifice hit. In the 5th there was more batting on both sides, Ridgeway scoring 4 runs and Clinton 8. In the 6th Sinclair went into the box for Clinton and Hinkley, of Milan, for Ridgeway. Ridgeway drew goose eggs in the 6th and 7th and scored 1 in the 8th and 2 in the 9th, while Clinton scored 1 in the 6th, 2 in the 7th and 2 in the 8th, winning the game by a score of 14 to 9. There was some really fine plays on both sides, and the pitchers did some effective work. For Clinton, Coddling struck out 9 runs and Sinclair six; for Ridgeway, Huston struck out 8 and Hinckley 2. Catchers Palmer, for the Ridgeways and Boocher for Clinton, filled their positions in an almost faultless manner. Umpire Thorn was impartial and gave general satisfaction. The Clinton club go to Ridgeway Saturday of this week.

ONSTED ODDS.

Rather cold Sunday and Monday for coruplanting.

M. Aldrich went to the county seat Tuesday on business.

George Daniels and Jake Maxwell each have lost a horse lately.

Mrs. Frank Avery is still greatly troubled with inflammatory rheumatism which has caused her to keep her bed for three weeks.

After being idle for eleven or twelve years the Cambridge cheese factory east of here started up last week and the rattle of tinware is heard along the streets once more.

The elocutiohary entertainment at the church here last Saturday evening was well patronized, the house being well filled and $7.50 was taken in.

There will be a memorial service held at the North Rome church, the evening of May 30th.

Some corn has been planted in this vicinity but the bulk will be put in the last of this week or soon after.

The earliest varieties of cherries are blossoming and now it is time to give them a good spraying of London purple and water to check the insects that prey upon them.

Monday afternoon as Henry Daniels drove up to a freight car with a load of baled hay for the purpose of unloading, his team, a pair of colts, became frightened and jumped suddenly sideways, which caused the wagon to tip up on one side, spilling Henry and some of the bales out, yanking the forward wheels lose from the rest of the wagon, and then the team ran up against the hotel, not thinking that local option was in effect, and were readily caught. Henry escaped without any injury but the wagon reach and three tugs were broken. Now watch a little out my boy, next time you will get badly left.

A few of the farmers have washed their sheep and will shear as soon as the fleeces are thoroughly dry and the weather fair.

Our better half says that the house is all cleaned up (but of course we would not known if she had not told us) and now we can once more sit at the familiar old desk as we jot down a few items for the Herald, etc.

Wm. Aldrich has a light Brahma biddy which yielded the other day an egg which measured 7x8½ inches.

A gentleman and son, by the name of Parker, from Adrian, have located in town and intend to repair boots, shoes and harness; also to make new boots and shoes for whoever wishes anything in that line. They seem to be thorough gentlemen and first-class workmen, and invite the patronage of the people of this locality to give them a call as they guarantee good work.

For all diseases arising from impure blood, Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup is invaluable, as it is a sworn enemy to all poisons in the blood.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

George Hoxsie spent a part of last week in Jackson. He says, however, they didn't get him behind the bars.

Two men with a team owned by M. H. Higby loaded a number of cars with logs at the station last week.

People need not wait until Barnum gets here if they are in a hurry to see a curiosity. If they will call on Al. Macham he will show them a lamb having but two legs, and he wouldn't be mean enough to charge them a quarter for looking at it, either.

Carrie Doty spent Saturday and Sunday last with her parents.

Chas. Lossing went to Ypsilanti on Saturday to see his son, Ed., who is sick with the measles.

Chas. Fabrique, wife and children, returned to their home in Clinton last Monday, after a two days' visit at O. E. Carpenter's.

Stephen Gay packed his trunk and started for North Morenci Monday morning. He concluded he had got the trade down fine enough, and quit his job with A. M. Sleeper.

Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Britton spent Sunday and Monday last at Fred Kopkie's.

The first funeral at the new church was held on Friday, May 11th. It was occasioned by the death of an infant daughter of Mrs. Chas. Miller.

Lizzie and Becca Preston are sick with the measles.

John Campbell returned one day last week and got the tools he used in the foundry. He is at present holding down a job in the purifier works at Jackson.

Dr. and Mrs. Begel returned Monday from Hanover, where they were suddenly called to attend the funeral of Mrs. Begel's brother. It was a great shock to the family, they not having heard of his sickness.

James Sutherland has moved into the house formerly occupied by John Gordon. James has just finished a good job of painting and papering, which gives the place a more pleasant look.

FRANKLIN FACTS.

A crop of German measles supplimented by the whooping-cough, has sprung up all over northern Franklin; some have been left in bad condition by their failing to come out readily. Little Nina Allen, daughter of G. W., is suffering from the latter cause.

A little son of Warnie Hampton is very sick.

Ezra Simmons is building about 400 rods of slat and wire fence. Mr. Stout of Bridgewater who is doing the work is turning out as neat a job as we have seen. The fence is a credit to all concerned and adds greatly to the beauty of Mr. Simmons fine farms.

After more than ten long years of sickness the last winter of which has been passed in intense pain and suffering, the spirit of Mrs. George Allen passed peacefully and without a struggle into the beyond, at 9 o'clock A. M the 12th inst. The funeral occured at the house at 2 P. M. Sunday. A large circle of mourning relatives, neighbors and friends assembled to pay their last sad respects to the departed. Rev. J. M. Getchel delivered a beautiful and touching sermon. The coffin was decorated with choice and rare flowers, among them three great golden hearted callies of unusual beauty, and she who lay so peacefully beneath them had loved the flowers with almost passionate tenderness during life.

How's Your Liver!

The old lady who replied, when asked how her liver was, "God bless me, I never heard that there was such a thing in the house," was noted for her amiability. Prometheus, when chained to a rock, might as well have pretended to be happy, as the man who is chained to a diseased liver. For poor Prometheus, there was no escape; but by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, the disagreeable feelings, irritable temper, constipation, indigestion, dizziness and sick headache, which are caused by a diseased liver, promptly disappear.

Hudson Post: It takes piles 900 ft. in length to reach solid earth at the sink hole, on the Mackinaw, north of this place. The work of ballasting the road is progressing rapidly, five engines being utilized in hauling gravel day and night. The ballasting will probably be finished this week.

GOOD ENOUGH FOR HIM.

Mr. A. B. Rowley, Druggist, was induced to try some of the Papillon Catarrh Cure by his customers, after several physicians predicted he would soon have consumption from an aggravated case of Catarrh. He says: "The result was unprecedented. I commenced to get well after the first application, and am now, after a few weeks, entirely cured." Papillon (extract of flax) Catarrh Cure will do all that is claimed for it. Large bottles $1.00.

THE CONSUMER PAYS THE TAX.

If protectionists were honest they would admit that a high tariff benefits certain interests at the cost of the whole body of consumers. But they are crafty and sophistical. So plain a statement of their case would defeat their purpose. That which is essentially a selfish system, compelling the many to enrich the few, rests upon a basis of atrocious falsehood. A favorite statement with protection apologists is a denial of the truism that a consumer pays all taxes upon products. Senator Fry made such denial the other day. He refrained from going as far as Senator Logan went when he assured a western audience that British manufacturers paid the custom house tax at New York upon all the goods sent into this country, and were compelled thereby most unwillingly to contribute to the defrayal of the expense of this government.

The commissioner of internal revenue has just reported to the senate that from the adoption of the internal tax policy in 1862 until June last the government collected as a tax upon spirits and fermented liquors $1,448,620,066. Who paid this enormous amount during these years? The distiller and the brewer? The government collected it from these manufacturers, but who paid it? Taken from the distiller and the brewer it was added to the price of the liquors, and the tax came out of the pockets of the consumers, the men who pour the stuff into their stomachs. During all these 25 years, any a heavy taxpayer for whisky went to his grave because, tax or no tax, he would indulge an awful craving for liquor.

When during the war the government exacted from street car companies a special tax of a cent for every passenger carried, who paid the tax. The companies out of their profits? The companies collect it from their passengers. So regarding the tax levied loudly upon real estate. He passes it on to the tenant who is the taxpayer. So with every tax. The ultimate taxpayer is the consumer.

An American merchant purchases at Manchester or Sheffield an invoice of English made goods. He pays the market price. When the consignment reaches the New York custom house the American importer pays the tariff because the government, having the whip hand, will not await the slow, uncertain and unsatisfactory process of collection from the ultimate purchaser for sale, but lays its hands upon the goods at the port of entry demanding its tribute. What does the merchant do? He determines the selling price by adding to the cost of the goods in Manchester or Sheffield the cost of transportation, the custom house tax, all expenses including the brokerage and insurance and upon the whole sum figures his own percentage of profit, adding this to the selling price. The goods are passed on. Is it not plain as a pikestaff that the man who finally buys for use some small portion of this origin consumer foots the bill?

But suppose the consumer buys goods of home manufacture, how can the tariff affect him is the question only. The answer is found in the very reason why a high tariff is asked. In the shelter of the custom house the home producer of suit, or woolens, or lumber, or any other highly protected article, makes an artificial price which is not broken down by foreign competition is restricted by the tariff. The price thus raised is passed on to the ultimate purchaser of these products, who in such cases has the poor satisfaction of contributing to the overgrown surplus in the national treasury, for the extra price exacted from him was solely profits of manufacturers, grown immensely rich on such an unwarranted favoritism of law. But may not the keenness of home competition break down this profit? It does, why have a protective tariff? But least of all, associations, trusts, combines upon profits, are organized in order that the solves may by so doing make greater certainty of their motion.—Chicago Herald.

GEN. ALGER ON THE TARIFF

The Home Club invited Gen. R. A. Alger, of Michigan, to deliver an address upon the tariff in Boston; and, in his reply, declining the invitation, [illegible] that the present tariff laws should be thoroughly overhauled, from the first item on the list to the last. I believe the policy should be to abolish all duties on productions that do not conflict with our home products and industries. While I would make these reductions, so far as practicable, I would not disturb the duty on the articles produced in this country that would open our markets to foreign competition so as to reduce in any measure the present rates of labor. Still further, if it is necessary to thoroughly protect home industries upon any article or articles, I would increase the duty to a point that would absolutely protect them against such a reduction of wages.

If Gen. Alger has been correctly reported, he might as well hang up his presidential fiddle at once. No man who favors the mutilation of the present tariff in this manner will stand a ghost of a show of receiving the Chicago nomination.

PENSION LEVITY.

While two republican conventions continue to pass resolutions intended to bring the president's pension record into disrepute, Mr. Cleveland goes on his way, approving and vetoing pension bills than were ever passed upon by any of his predecessors.

His latest effort in the line of a veto deserves the study of those who have charged him with treating pension bills with unbecoming levity. He has just withheld his approval of Senate bill 818 granting a pension to Mary Sullivan. According to his message returning this bill it is an exact copy of one approved by the president July 1st, 1886, in compliance with which "the beneficiary's name was placed on the pension rolls," where it now is.

The president's brutal facetiousness in thus preventing the duplication of pension bills is infamous. What right has he to remember what he has or has not approved? Such levity is calculated to make taxpayers weep.—Chicago News.

Major Bundy, of the New York Mail and Express, who was in Washington some years ago when a big circus was [illegible]

"I knew his weakness that way myself," said the major in reading it. "So I got a hack and drove him to the circus one night.

"He got full the attention of the audience between himself and the circus. His remarks were as pointed as a shell's and his expressions of delight fully as spontaneous.

"When we drove back to the city we were passing Matt Carpenter's house, when the General spied a light in the sleeping window. He insisted that we should call and see Carpenter. You may imagine that as Carpenter had just got a fresh case of beer from Milwaukee we stayed with him for some time. Indeed, it was after 1 o'clock when Mrs. Carpenter gave us the hint on which we proceeded to get and went away.

"We had not gone far when the General pulled me up and said, 'Now, here is Davy Porter's house. He never goes to bed until morning. Let's go in and see him. He's sure to be up.'

"Well, we went in and the Admiral was up as the General expected, and it was after 4 o'clock when we got away from him against his protest that we were going early. I mentally protested that it would be late if we stayed longer.

"Now if you can imagine a bigger circus night than that I should like to hear of it."

MEDICINES BAD TO TAKE.

The Old Notion that Healing Draughts Ought To Be "Nasty" Giving Place to the Opposite One.

The old fashioned notion that "physic" ought to be "nasty," and that if it is not nasty it cannot possibly do the patient any good, seems now in a fairway to be ranked among exploded fallacies.

The Pharmaceutical Journal, an English periodical which has played a conspicuous part in dispelling this ancient delusion, tells us that intelligent physicians and successful practitioners now recognize the fact that the influence of the mind over the body is such that the whims and fastidiousness of patients in respect to nauseous and offensive medicines "cannot be consistently ignored." But there is yet another reason, as it is authority reminds us.

It is well known that patients often deceive their doctor by throwing away medicines that on the taste grate repulsive in appearance, and this even in cases where the success of a cure or the failure of the remedy is perhaps a matter of life or death. As a natural result, if the patient does not recover benefit, the doctor or the drug, or both, bear the blame.

After this course will be surprised to learn that the past year has shown greatly increased appreciation of everything that tends not only to definite doses, but also to convenience and palatability in medicines.

A Modern Miracle.

Mrs. J. W. Wentworth, of Elkhart, Ind., was long subject to pain in the side, shortness of breath, weakness, pain in the side, slight cough, swelling of the ankles and other symptoms of serious heart disease. She was expected to die at any time. Doctors in New York, Toledo, etc., failed to help her. But two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Cure for the Heart cured her three years ago and she has remained well ever since. Heart disease can be cured. Sold by Baker & Hall.

IMPORTANT.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and carriage Hire and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot. Elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1.00 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

A Child's Philosophy.

Here's an illustration of a great the benevolent play, sorely on the part of an eight-year-old:

Harry's mother, having heard for some little time what seemed to be a moaning or crying in some distant part of the house, had a search made, and found in a remote, very small and perfectly dark closet, the family darling, Leo by name, shut in, with scarcely room enough to turn around.

How did he get there? Why, Harry had shut him up, of course. Harry was summoned and questioned.

"Why did you shut Leo in that closet?"

"Oh, 'cause he did feel so good when he got let out."

Awkward.

The great auk is an extinct bird. Undoubtedly its great auk-wardness proved fatal.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

A Narrow Escape.

Mrs. L. S. Pickerell, of Middlebury, Ind., had a very narrow escape from the insane asylum. For years she was subject to headache, palpitation, spinal pain, sleeplessness and nervous prostration. For three years she had convulsions, often as many as fifty a night. Able physicians failed to help her. At last after taking that wonderful remedy, Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for six weeks she was entirely cured. It is a recent discovery by one of the greatest of living physicians, and is working wonders. Trial bottle free at Baker and Hall's, Drug Store.

The Population of Tecumseh.

Is about 2,500 and we would say at least one half are troubled with some a section of the Throat and Lungs, as those complaints are, according to statistics, more numerous than others. We would advise all not to neglect the opportunity to call on us and get a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial size free. Respectfully, Baker & Hall, Druggists.

We especially invite the attention of mothers and daughters to page 9, of our medical pamphlet.

QUIT YOUR FOOLIN'.

Girls is queer! I used to think
Emmy didn't care for me,
For, whenever I would try
Any loving arts, to see
How she'd take 'em—sweet or sour—
Always saucy-like, says she:
"Quit your foolin'!"

Once, agoin' home f'om church,
[illegible]

Spunky! well, she acted so—
And she snapped me up so sharp—
"Quit your foolin'!"

Everytime I was just the same,
Till one night I says says I—
Choosin' some I must—and
Though it seems I kind of love—
Emmy, says I, [illegible]
Longer I'd let her [illegible]
As I did!

Girls is queer! She [illegible] laughed—
Cheeks burnin' like [illegible], says she,
For [illegible]
Rollin' [illegible] fast enough
We [illegible] I took the hint,
And a-lovin' [illegible] we
"Quit our foolin'!"

THE PEN WAS DROPPED.

It Lost to a County $100,000, and Has Made One Man Nervous Ever Since.

A farmer of Warren County, Penn., went to a lawyer's office in Warren a short time ago to sign some important papers.

After they had been read to him and approved a clerk in the office, in handing the farmer a pen to write his signature, dropped it on the floor. The lawyer himself sprang from his chair, hurriedly picked up the pen, and placed it in the farmer's hands.

"A delay of fifteen minutes caused by the dropping of a pen with which a man was to sign his name to a will, lost to Warren county $100,000 once," said the lawyer, "and the dropping of a pen about to be used has always made me nervous ever since.

"H. R. Rouse, of Enterprise, this county, was one of the pioneer oil operators on Oil Creek, and in the spring of 1861 his wells were yielding him a daily revenue larger than the average man's yearly income.

"The first great oil-well fire in the history of the oil regions occurred in April, 1861, when the Hawley & Merrick well suddenly began spouting oil and gas in such quantities that the oil ran to waste and flowed over the ground in all directions, and the gas filled the air for a quarter of a mile around, finally reaching an engine house, where the fire of the boiler ignited it. The result was acres of roaring flames which enveloped the spectators that had assembled to witness the then great novelty of a flowing well. How many persons were burned up in that awful fire was never ascertained, but twenty are known to have perished.

"H. R. Rouse was on the ground when the explosion occurred, and was hurled into the thickest of the conflagration. Two men, one of them named Uriah Smith, now living near Mercer, rushed into the terrible mass of fire, and seizing Mr. Rouse dragged him out in time. Both teachers were terribly burned, and were months in recovering from the results of their daring dash into that fierce sea of fire and boiling oil to rescue the oil prince.

"Rouse's clothing was burned from his body, which was one mass of blisters. His eyes were burned to a crisp in their sockets and his ears, hands and hair burned off. He was carried to a house at a safe distance. The explosion occurred at 6 p. m., and in spite of his frightful condition he lived until the next morning. He never lost consciousness, and as soon as everything that could be done for him was done, he began the dictation of his will.

"The intense agony he suffered made this a slow job, and when the will was finished it was morning. When the document was ready for his signature the person who had done the writing dipped the pen in the ink bottle, but in reaching it towards the dying man's outstretched hand he dropped it. The pen fell in a under a table, and a delay of at least a quarter of a minute occurred before it could be recovered. When it was found and placed in Mr. Rouse's hand the hand was powerless to use it. The brave oil prince was dead.

"In his will he had bequeathed the sum of $100,000 to the poor fund of Warren county. He had also left $100 each to the men who had preserved him from being cremated alive. The will being without his signature was, of course, legally inoperative, and his heirs did not think it incumbent upon them to carry out his wishes, although they were expressed under such extraordinary circumstances.

"The county lost its legacy, which was not so much to be wondered at, as the sum was very large; but the non-payment of the two $100 bequests to the men who, at the risk of their own lives, had saved the unfortunate oil operator to his family, at least for Christian burial, was long a matter of much comment in the oil regions."

ONE CAUSE OF BAD TEETH.

Their Strength Determined by the Use Made of Them.

The foundation for bad teeth is generally laid in early childhood, for numberless mothers and nurses very carefully soften the food or remove the crust from the bread before giving it to the little folks, because it may otherwise "hurt their teeth," and so the child grows up with a set of unused organs in its mouth; and when we have finally succeeded by the creation of artificial conditions in producing weak organs, then we wonder why the poor child has such bad teeth, and why it is so often suffering with the toothache, and why the dentist's bill is so high.

Teeth are organs specialized to perform the work of mastication; they are subject to the same laws that govern other organs, and their strength is determined by their use.

Understanding this, we are obliged to admit that, if we ever become a toothless race, it will be our own fault.—Popular Science Monthly.

TRANSATLANTIC TRAVEL.

An Economical Practice Which Is Not Commended.

There could not be a stronger evidence of the inexpensiveness of transatlantic travel than the fact that a barber near the City Hall, New York, working at $10 or $12 a week, makes it his practice to go to the other side every now and then to see how the trip could be made to the best advantage.

"I go in the steerage," he said, "and I live like a king. The first time I went I took a boiled ham and a few other delicacies in a big satchel. I made the acquaintance of four or five other young men, and my ham disappeared in two days, but each of them had done something of the same sort. One had some very fine bologna, and another some nice canned meats.

"Unfortunately, we ate up our whole stock three or four days before we landed, and then I found out something that caused me never again to take any food on a steamer.

"I found that by giving small tips to the stewards I could get first-class cabin fare. I selected one particular steward and took him aside every dinner time, and he told me what the nicest things were that were being eaten in the cabin, and I told him what I wanted, and we agreed on some quiet corner where he could meet me, and I lived like a prince.

"I had such delicacies as the finest pickled herrings and potato salad, and the best imported cheese and Vienna bread, and I only gave him ten cents for whatever he brought."

"Those stewards have pockets in their coats reaching from their collars down to their knees.

"As far as drinking was concerned, we got the best first cabin beverages at very moderate prices in a legitimate way."

JOHN CHAPMAN'S DREAM.

He Went to London and Received a Message in a Singular Way.

The north aisle and tower of Swoffham Church, Norfolk, are said to have been built by one [illegible] man, formerly a tinker, but [illegible] wealthy parishioner, who was warden in 1452. The following is recently told of him.

He woke one morning with a strong impression on his mind, produced by a dream, that if he went to London and stood on London Bridge he would hear of something to his advantage. This was so vividly impressed on him that he roused his wife and told her the dream, but her advice was:

"Never mind the dream; go to sleep again."

This he did, but again woke up after a repetition of it; and on again waking his wife, and telling her that he believed he ought to pay attention to this second intimation, she replied:

"Thee stay at home and mind thy pots and pans."

Again he went to sleep, only to repeat the dream for a third time; and when he rose in the morning he told his wife he had made up his mind to go to London, and not all the ridicule of his wife or advice of his friends could turn him from his purpose. So he walked the ninety miles, and on the evening of the third day reached the city, staying at a cheap lodging house.

After spending two days vainly standing on London Bridge, he tried the third day, which wore slowly away. Evening drew on, and he was just about to quit his post with a heavy heart, when a stranger accosted him, saying he had "noticed him standing there for several days, and was curious to know what he wanted;" to which he replied that "he came there on the vain errand of a dream."

"Alast good friend," said his interrogator, "if I had heeded dreams I might have proved myself as very a fool as thou hast, for 'tis not long since I dreamed that at a place called Swoffham, in Norfolk, dwells John Chapman, a peddler, who hath a tree at the back of his house, under which is buried a pot of money."

"Thank, you, sir," said the peddler, and immediately departed. He was not long in reaching home, and so soon as his wife saw him she said, in the familiar language of that time:

"Well, what did thee hear to thy advantage?"

"Thee mind thy own business," was the rejoinder of the now confident peddler, and he lost no time in commencing to dig under the tree.

After some tough work among the roots of the tree he came upon something hard, and after digging around it, succeeded in disinterring a square metal box full of gold coins.—Leeds Mercury.

THE HOMELIEST MAN IN DETROIT.

A Letter Goes a Begging—And a Very Good Reason Why.

A few days ago a letter reached this post-office directed: "To the Homeliest Man in Detroit." The usual programme in such cases is to hand it out to every caller until some one claims it, and the claim is usually made in two or three days. In this case, however, the letter still sticks, although it has been passed out two hundred times. A reporter saw it handed out several times one day, and the result was invariably the same.

"Beg pardon," said the clerk, after looking for a letter for Smith, "but here is one which may belong to you."

"To me? Let's see! Homeliest Man in Detroit, eh? No, I guess that isn't for me, but it hits a neighbor of mine mighty close."

Another man carefully read the address, scratched his head in a perplexed way and finally said:

"Wonder who could have sent me this letter?"

"Is it yours?"

"Why, I suppose so."

"Are you the Homeliest Man in Detroit?"

"Oh—ah! I see, now. Ha! ha! Of course I ain't, and you may keep it."

Another who received it glanced at the address, gave a start of surprise and muttered to himself:

"That's one of her tricks to locate me, but I don't bite. Here, ma'am, this letter has got mixed with my mail. I guess it belongs in the City Hall.—Detroit Free Press.

Jim—"I did try ter git a office, but these durned civil service rules kep' me out."

Bill—"What office did yer try fer?"

Jim—"Janitor of a public buildin'. They asked me how much two and two made, an' because I failed on the first answer they wouldn't have me."

Bill—"Never mind, Jim, I'll help yer ter git inter public life. I'll get yer elected school director, that don't require no 'xamination."—Omaha World.

GOLD LETTER THAN GINGER.

A Pleasant Story of Charles Dickens—It Is Way of Being Friends Again.

Eleanor E. Christian, writing in Temple Bar, says that once seeing Dickens standing motionless in rapt contemplation of the incoming waves, she made a hurried sketch of him. A young lady [illegible] to make acquaintance, but she had be[illegible] forcefully [illegible] of me, and she took this opportunity to avenge herself. She went off and informed Mr. Dickens that I had made a "[illegible] caricature of him."

I wondered at a [illegible] displeasure of manner that evening, she seemed vexed, and then told him that "[illegible] Her husband noticed the caricature, and he was [illegible] and yet.

Impatient to have the little drawing, between the leaves of the book being used, she quietly handed it to her without a word.

Directly she looked at it she dimpled into a pleased smile, exclaiming, "Oh, how like! It is really very good, and not a caricature at all. Let me show it to Charles at once. He will see that she was completely mistaken. Don't look so fearful, poor little girl! such nonsense to make a false report about this pretty sketch. Will you give it to me, dear? I shall value it very much!"

She kissed me with her usual sweet, kindly manner, and went off triumphantly with the sketch.

Mr. Dickens met me in the evening with a return to his genial bonhomie, and an amused twinkle in his eyes. I looked appealingly at him, as I murmured, "How could you think I would presume to caricature you? That horrid, red haired Miss F—— only wanted to set you against me."

"My enslaver!" he exclaimed, throwing himself into a stagely attitude, "I always loved ginger-bread, even after childhood's hours had vanished into the dim past, and her ruddy tresses awaken fond memories of my lollipop days; but I don't like her ginger as I do your gold,' and he twitched my curls mischievously as he passed on.

Preaching Under Difficulties.

A curious case of the pursuit of preaching under difficulties came under my notice.

In a country church in the remote districts of the West of England, a swarm of bees had taken up their quarters in the oaken wood-work at the back of the pulpit, to the dismay and discomfort of the weekly occupant of that structure.

During the discharge of his peculiar function he was not only annoyed with the busy, sullen roar of the hive, but his fear of arousing their animosity by the loud challenge of his tones, or by the vibration of the pulpit, was stimulated by the light skirmishers, which used to come out and perform all sorts of minatory manœuvres within measurable distance of his nose.

The annoyance at length became intolerable, and orders were given to smoke out the bees. This was effectually done; but, unfortunately, the clerk in smoking out the bees set fire to the church, and it was burned to the ground.—Chambers's Journal.

Virtues of Onions and Beef.

The most life-giving and digestible food that can be given to one just recovering from an illness is chopped beef.

Just take a pound of the finest round of raw beef, cut off all the fat, slice two onions, and add pepper and salt. Then chop the onions and meat together, turning them over and over until both are reduced to almost a pulp. Then spread on slices of rye bread and eat as sandwiches.

People talk about celery being a nervine, but let me tell you that there is nothing which quiets the nerves without bad results like onions. The use of them induces sleep, and much strength is obtained from them.

A Voracious Cow.

In the stomach of a cow butchered recently at Tuscaloosa, Ala., were forty-two nails and pieces of nails, four buttons, one brass safety pin, one pin with black rubber head, one copper cent, three pieces of watch chain—one piece six inches, one four inches, and the other one an inch long—three pieces of glass, one piece of oyster shell, four pieces of brass wire, three small pieces of iron, three pieces of brass, and a piece of hoopskirt.

The Joke Noah Told to the Kangaroo.

A conductor poked his head in the door of a car and called out the station "Sawyer," whereupon a young man upon his wedding tour, who was about to kiss his bride, yelled back:

"I don't care if you did, sir; she's my wife."

The "Plug Hat."

The "plug hat" says a Western paper, is airy and its roof is so high that the action of the sun is not apt to immediately affect the brain.

It is the most sensible hat yet invented, unless it be a straw hat for summer.

An Impartial Criticism.

A boarding house mistress comes in for a great deal more cynicism than she deserves.

Unfeeling critics say of her that she has her weak and strong points—the weak point being her coffee and the strong point her butter.—Shoe and Leather Reporter.

Patience Exhausted.

Collector—"This is the last time I shall call for the amount of this bill."

Delinquent—"Yes?"

Collector—"Yes. The next time I shall stand out on the street and yell for it."—Life.

Can't be Found.

Pocket guide-books are numerous, but none of them can guide charity to a mean man's pockets with profitable results.—New Orleans Picayune.

Just What She Does.

A health journal says: "No woman can walk in a corset."

Of course it is impossible, for there isn't room enough. She only "stays" in it.

Deep Counsel.

"What shall I do?" said the young and attractive blonde. "George is very attentive. He's awfully nice."

"Well, accept him."

"No, I don't want to yet. You see he's poor and—I am having lots of fun—and—but he will be rich in about five years."

"Well, tell him you'll wait."

"How can I do that? He would find out that I wanted his money—but I really want him, you know. How can I keep him hanging on?"

"Tell him you will not marry—that you are going to be an old maid, and keep it up as long as he will stand it."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Everybody to His Trade.

Nothing is truer than that a man who attempts to be a jack at all trades is successful in none. Equally true is it that life is too short for a man to prepare himself for grappling with all kinds of diseases. We need specialists in medicine, and in large cities it is becoming more and more the custom [illegible] special line of practice. The names of many such become familiar the world around, as that of Dr. Douglas who attended General Grant, or that of Dr. Foote, of New York, whose original views of and successful practice in chronic diseases, have become widely known because his extraordinary writings and remarkable cures are to be found in almost every county of every state of the Union. His favorite work, "Plain Home Talk," has worked its way around the globe both ways, via London and via San Francisco to Australia and New Zealand, with the result that the doctor at his office, 120 Lexington Ave., New York, is in receipt of consultation letters and reports from patients in every foreign mail. But this prophet is not without honor in his own country, and it is mainly from his own country men that Dr. Foote invites free consultation and to whom he offers the benefit of his thirty years experience. His career and success alone prove the advantage of specialism.

Very Forgetful.

Anatole (to De Jones, who has been trying to make himself understood in bill-of-fare French)—"If ze gentlemon vill talk ze language vot he was born in, I vill very much better understand."

Mr. De Jones (to friend)—"Queer, ain't it, how soon these Frenchmen forget their own lingo when they get over here?"—Puck.

The Redeeming Quality.

The Rev. Mr. Artichoke—"My dear, I have been asked to preach the funeral sermon of that dissipated and unprincipled Tom Ratsbane. I can't think of a single good thing to say about him—in conscience. What am I going to do about it?"

Mrs. Artichoke (after long thought)—"Oh, yes, dear, I have it; you can say that he died a poor man."—Burlington Free Press.

A Foolish Extravagance.

"Young man," he said solemnly, "what would you think if I should put an enemy into my mouth to steal away my brains?"

"I would (hic) think, sir," hiccoughed the young man, "that you were going to an unnecessary expense."

"If a woman is pretty,
To me 'tis no matter,
Be she blonde or brunette,
So she lets me look at her."

An unhealthy woman is rarely, if ever, beautiful. The peculiar diseases to which so many of the sex are subject, are prolific causes of pale, sallow faces, blotched with unsightly pimples, dull lustreless eyes and emaciated forms. Women so afflicted, can be permanently cured by using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription; and with the restoration of health comes that beauty which combined with good qualities of head and heart, makes women angels of loveliness. "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers; that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Their Business Booming.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at C. A. Wright & Co's Drug Store as their giving away to their customers of so many free trial bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article from the fact that it always cures and never disappoints. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it before buying by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted.

C. A Wright & CO.

Perhaps no local disease has puzzled and baffled the medical profession more than nasal catarrh. While not immediately fatal it is among the most distressing, nauseous and disgusting ills the flesh is heir to, and the records show very few or no cases of radical cure of chronic catarrh by any of multitude of modes of treatment until the introduction of Ely's Cream Balm a few years ago. The success of this preparation has been most gratifying and surprising.

English spavin liniment removes all hard, soft, or calloused lumps and blemishes from horses, blood spavin, curbs, splints, sweeney, strifes, sprains, sore and swollen throat coughs, etc. Save $50 by use of one bottle. Warranted. Sold by Baker & Hall, Druggists, Tecumseh Mich.

For a languid, tired feeling, Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup has no equal, creating a good appetite, and rendering a healthy and active digestion.

Itch, mange, and scratches of every kind on human or animals cured in 30 minutes by Woolford's Sanitary Lotion. This never fails. Sold by Baker & Hall, Druggists, Tecumseh Mich.

Babies that are fretful, peevish, cross, or troubled with Windy Colic, Teething Pains, or Stomach Disorders, can be relieved at once by using Acker's Baby Soother. It contains no Opium or Morphine, hence is safe. Price 25 cents. Sold by C. A. Wright & Co., Druggists.

CLARA, how is the baby? Oh, he is as chirp as a lark. That Hibbard's Throat and Lung Balsam is a great remedy. Three doses relieved his suffering, and he was ready for play.

THERE is nothing more miraculous in its effects, entirely removing from the face moth patches or brown spots purely by its action on the blood, than Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup.

DR A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, with the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most sceptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of lungs and bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it cures readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence of its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Prices 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for June.

Closes the twenty-third semi-annual volume of this well known monthly, and contains the index to the volume. The contents of the number are timely to the season, and two of the articles relate to Lake Champlain. These are "Bow Arrow Point and the American Canoe Association," by Frederic G. Mather, and "Our Summer on Lake Champlain, the Inland Resort of the Future," by Emily Pierce. Both of these articles are finely and fully illustrated, and they make one long to visit the Lake George has so long monopolized attention that it is an agreeable change to find Lake Champlain receiving the recognition its beauties merit.

There is to be a prohibition paper published in Adrian. It is to be edited by D. W. Grandon, of West Virginia. The new paper will have an exclusive field in Lenawee's county seat.—Hudson Post.

MEMORIAL DAY FLOWERS WANTED.

The children of Michigan are invited by the Detroit Journal to gather and send bouquets of wild flowers (or any other flowers) to decorate the soldiers' graves on Memorial Day, May 30th, the flowers to be arranged by the ladies of the Women's Relief Corps of Detroit, when received.

The $60,000 which was expended in erecting this monument to the memory of all the Michigan soldiers who lost their lives in the war of the Rebellion, was contributed by the people of the entire State, and several thousand dollars of this amount was made up from the gifts of school children of the State, thus making it especially appropriate that the monument this year should be decorated by the children of the children who helped to build it twenty-two years ago.

The Michigan Press Association, which meets in Detroit, May 29, 30 and 31, is so timed that from nearly every railroad station in Michigan, on the morning of Tuesday, May 29, some editor will leave his home for Detroit, and no doubt, will willingly carry the children's gifts of flowers, together with the names and addresses of the donors, which will be published in the Detroit Journal of May 30.

After serving their purpose during the day to decorate the monument, the flowers will be distributed by the Detroit Journal in the hospitals, and among the sick of Detroit, and among the children of the Home of the Friendless, and in all the various orphan asylums and charitable institutions.

The children are therefore invited to gather boquets of wild flowers, and take them, together with a card bearing the donor's name and address, to the trains on the morning of Tuesday, May 29, where, in the baggage car, or in a special flower offering car, arrangements will be provided for their reception and transportation. Soldiers' wives and friends, and school teachers are requested to assist in receiving and forwarding the flowers. Who will assist in this work? Send in your names.

THE TECUMSEH DUDE OF 1830.

The supreme court has just given an important decision on sidewalks, which ought to be a warning to owners of walks who fail to keep them in good condition. The case in question was the city of Detroit vs. Chaffee. A person fell on a defective sidewalk abutting Chaffee's property, and sued the city for damages, getting $2,500. The city then sued Chaffee for keeping a defective sidewalk, and the case was taken from the jury and decided in favor of Chaffee. The city appealed and a new trial was ordered. This decision means that the city can look to property owners for the payment of damages against the city by injured persons. It therefore behooves the careless lot owner to look well to his sidewalk, and keep it in repair. If he fails to do so he may have to look to his purse, through the stern decision of a court.

Nothing Like It.

Every day swells the volume of proof that as a specific for all blood diseases, nothing equals Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Remember, this is an old established remedy with a record. It has been weighed in the balance and found fulfilling every claim. It has been tested many years in thousands of cases with flattering success. For Throat and Lung troubles, catarrh, Kidney disease, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache and all disorders resulting from impoverished blood, there is nothing like Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery—world renowned and ever growing in favor.

See advertisement in another column.

One hundred and ninety flat cars were hauled into the gravel pit last Friday morning.

OUR LOCAL TELEGRAPH LINE.

The following taken from the Detroit Evening News gives a very creditable description of the present status of the Commercial Telegraph line.

C. M. Crowell, of the [illegible] and Expositor, recently gave the News an outline of the rise and progress of the farmers' telegraph lines in Lenawee County which are operated with ordinary Morse instruments. Some time ago two farmers, R. J. W. Bower and W. B. Keyser, living near the village of Tecumseh connected their houses with wires, to which thereafter other farm houses were connected. After a time the wires were run into the village of Tecumseh and in 1888 the line became incorporated and as the Commercial telegraph company, all of the farm house connections being maintained. It has now 65 miles of wire and 90 offices. Eight of these offices are in Adrian, one in Tom Applegate's newspaper office, one in the telephone office, one or two in private residences, the rest in stores. About two-thirds of the total number of offices are in farm houses and every farmer is his own operator, battery man and line repairer. Its main connection is with the Britton and Ridgeway telegraph lines, owned by private parties, connecting those two Lenawee county villages.

When a farmer is charged with purchasing articles for household consumption, and man-like forgets them when he reaches town, all he has to do is to step to the key and have his wife go over the list again by wire.

As it happened, one farmer's life was saved by the wire. By accident he took a dose of poison, and no doctor within several miles. But the wire was connected with the doctor's office in Tecumseh and the farmer's daughter sprang to it and called up the physician. Having ascertained the kind of poison, the doctor telegraphed back to fill the patient with sweet milk until he got there.

The farmers' wires are also connected with the post office and freight offices. The Adrian branch is connected with the Sand Lake line, another organized line. Connections are also had with the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad line at Adrian, and with the Cincinnati, Jackson and Mackinaw railroad line at Tecumseh. From one or the other of these depots standard time is transmitted at 11 o'clock. When a piece of important news is received by the depot officers or at the office of the Adrian Times, some event of great national or state importance, it is sent over the farmers' lines and by this means the farmers who are regarded as slow and behind the times are often several hours [illegible] of the cities. In this go ahead view of the case, it is the dwellers in the cities and not the farmers, at least in Lenawee county, who ought to be called mossbacks.—Evening News.

June 5th, Tuesday—Democratic National Convention at St. Louis.

June 19th, Tuesday—Republican National Convention at Chicago.

MEMORIAL DAY.

The committee appointed to arrange for the proper observance of Memorial Day in Tecumseh, met pursuant to call at G. A. R. Hall, on Friday evening last and report progress as follows. There will be a Union Memorial service at the Presbyterian church on Sabbath evening, May 27th, at usual hour. Beers' Post G. A. R. and Co. C. M. S. T. will attend this service in a body. The discourse will be delivered by Rev. F. Adkins. All citizens are cordially invited to attend.

The public exercises on Memorial Day will be in the afternoon on Monument square and at the cemetery, commencing at the former place at 2 o'clock. The following assignments have been made.

The procession will be marshalled by John R. Healy assisted by aids appointed by himself.

President of the Day—Rev. Josiah Phelps.

Opening Prayer—Rev. J. M. Getchell.

Oration—Rev. T. G. Potter.

Closing Prayer—Rev. W. H. Babbitt.

The exercises at the cemetery will be conducted by commander G. W. Marsden and chaplain L. Barnes, assisted by the officers of the day of Beers' Post. The graves of the veterans will be decorated by a detail of old soldiers from Beers' Post, whilst the members of Co. C. will in a similar manner pay tribute to the memory of their comrades, who after life's fitful fever now sleep well, beneath the sods of the cemetery.

The important and onerous duty of procuring flowers and arranging them into wreaths, garlands, etc. was assigned to Mr. G. S. Tiffany. This is an exceedingly laborous, responsible and difficult position and all patriotic citizens, both male and female, are especially solicited to consider themselves members of this committee, and bravely come forward and assist in the labor of love to which we give outward expression on each 30th of May. All such persons will with flowers, and with willing and ready hearts and hands report to Mr. Tiffany early on Wednesday morning. It is requested that places of business be generally closed from 2 to 4 P. M. The following appointments were also made.

Decorate grand stand and monument—Alexander Turner.

Music—J. M. Ingersoll and A. P. Robinson.

Invitation and line of march—F. B. Wood and W. H. Hayden.

Finance—J. H. Smith and L. P. Tatson.

Transportation—H. W. Stevens.

The union council, fire department and all civic, military and benevolent associations are invited to attend in a body. The public schools and sabbath schools it is hoped will be well represented, and our citizens are urged to come out en masse and help make this most beautiful and appropriate of all our National holidays a Memorial Day in fact as well as in name.

Business Men's Association.

The Tecumseh Business Men's Association will hold a special meeting at the council building on Wednesday evening, May 23d, which the business men of Tecumseh are requested to attend. Several propositions from outside parties will be brought before the association and other important business considered.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Snavely Bros. have a stock of Almanacs.

Alva Coddington is moving into Mrs. Warren's place on Maumee St.

Mrs. Wm. Tilton spent a few days last week with friends at Ann Arbor.

Louis Hardenburg, who is attending college at Hillsdale, is spending a few days at home.

Farmers in want of seed corn will do well to call on A. P. Coddington. He has a superior quality of selected ears fire cured.

The Young Peoples' Society of the Presbyterian Church will present a literary and musical program to-morrow (Friday) evening.

Baker & Hall have opened their soda fountain. Mr. Baker is an adept at mixing syrups and their soda water is a very palatable summer drink.

The Free Methodists will hold a camp meeting at Devil's Lake this summer. They purpose carrying the war into the enemy's own country.

Owing to the very cold weather last Saturday evening the band considered it best not to give an out door concert. They will appear next Saturday evening however, without fail.

Hon. Geo. R. Hurd, Mayor of Monroe, was in town Tuesday, having been summoned here to attend the funeral of his brother-in law, Geo. L. Spicer.

Walter Heck has just finished an India ink portrait of Ed. Rowland's little girl, which is a very fine likeness indeed. Mr. Heck should cultivate his talent in this direction.

Geo. Marsden has the popular "milk-shake" apparatus with which to prepare lemonade and other summer drinks. It is something new and just the thing for his business.

The new base ball grounds of Clinton were opened last Saturday by a game between Clinton and Ridgeway, in which the former won. Both teams were treated to a banquet in the evening.

The people respond cheerfully to the recommendation of the Council relative to numbering the houses and business places, but as many are from home, it would facilitate the business greatly if the owner would leave word at their home or with Mr. Geo. Heesen, President of the Council.

"Yesterday" is the title of the latest song by the celebrated composer A. Strelezki. It is a song of unusual merit, having a most delightful and charming melody, written in good flowing style, and thoroughly effective. Price, 40c. Published by J. Fischer & Bro., 7 Bible House, New York.

Charles R. Miller, of Adrian, has purchased 8,000 acres of timber lands, in the northwestern part of Presque Isle County, Merritt Chandler, Cheboygan, the seller, reserving the pine timber on the lands, which also contain a large quantity of hardwood timber. The consideration was $10,000—dirt cheap, as the lands are said to be worth from $5 to $7 an acre for farming purposes after the timber is taken off.

A fellow going under a fictitious name, representing himself as connected with a Toledo wholesale grocery house, is traveling over the state soliciting orders from the farmers for groceries. He carries a fine line of samples, and sells at astonishing low prices. He takes orders for goods and tells his customers that they will arrive on a certain day in a car, and for them to go and get them. The farmer signs the order, which turns out to be a note for several hundred dollars.

Wm. McCowen has arranged in his store a coffin show room, which is a great improvement on the old plan, or rather lack of plan. Cupboards are built along the wall each containing a casket placed on end. The doors of these cupboards open downwards, displaying the casket attached thereto in a horizontal position so it can be easily examined. When closed the cupboards are perfectly tight, thus keeping the casket clean and free from dirt. He has 17 of them, holding that number of different samples. The arrangement will be a great convenience to purchasers of coffins and caskets.

The Young People's Society of the M. E. church held a very interesting session on Monday evening. Singing by Messrs. Tremaine, Walter Heck and Mrs. Rosacrans, a fine select reading by Miss Florence Potter, and a few recitations constituted the literary part of the program. Refreshments followed and, although the thermometer stood at forty, the supply of ice cream was entirely exhausted. The young ladies would take a dish of ice cream, go to the furnace and thaw out and then take another dish. The ice cream season is fairly on, it seems, notwithstanding the weather. The society netted over $5.00 out of the evening's entertainment.

Miss Mabel Hayden went to Detroit last Saturday.

Peterson's Magazine for June is an admirable number of this most excellent periodical. The opening story, "Jack's Little Princess," is a charming tale, and the illustrations are worthy of it. "Put to the Test," by Frank Lee Benedict, ends satisfactorily and has proved one of the most interesting serials its author has written in a long while. Another excellent story is "The Lovers at Tuggle's trap," and "In Harvest Time" is equally striking in its way. Send for a sample copy. OPENING OF A GOOD WINTER CIRCUS.

The first winter circus New York has had in years started with a good-sized boom yesterday afternoon at the American Institute building. Energetic circus managers have long been convinced that there is money in the winter circus if one could only be found who believes in the theory that the early bird catches the worm. It has been the custom heretofore with all parties to nominate their presidential and state ticket before putting their county ticket in the field. But Mr. Bay is a political reformer. He believes that the most important political offices should be settled early in the campaign and by settling the question of sheriff at once it will save the Republican County Convention much trouble and annoyance. We understand indirectly that Henry W. Stevens will likely be a candidate when the proper time arrives, but we venture to say that he will submit his claims to the decision of the Republican County Convention. Well, if Mr. Bay insists upon running for sheriff, we can see no reason why the Democrats should object. He was cleaned out very handsomly two years ago, and he can be defeated just as easily again.

Morenci is already talking up a Fourth of July celebration.

James Potter has been in Milan the past two weeks putting up two new dry kilns at Hayden's stave factory to replace the ones that were burned down a short time ago.

A GOOD BEGINNING.

How the First Step in the Road to Distinction Was Taken.

On a beautiful summer morning, not many years ago, two bright-faced boys were strolling along the beach in front of [illegible] the southern coast of Sweden. Suddenly [illegible] crescent-shaped, set with magnificent diamonds. Holding it up, he exclaimed:

"Oh, Carl, see what I've picked up!"

"Why, Otto," said his companion, "those are diamonds. I'll swear of it. For nothing else ever sparkles like those do. And what you be lucky lower for you can not ever be miles inland for such a pin—that."

"Away, Carl," said Otto, reproachfully. "What do you mean? This pin isn't mine. I am sure it must belong to one of the great ladies at the hotel, and I shall try to find the owner."

"Oh, nonsense! That won't pay. You'll perhaps not get even a 'thank you' for your pains, and you will feel mean enough afterwards to think you were such a fool."

"I am sure an approving conscience will be sufficient reward," said Otto, "even if I get no thanks for what I do."

Otto went at once to the hotel, and there told the proprietor his story, at the same time putting into his hand the crescent pin.

"Good lad! good lad!" cried the hotel-keeper. "Yes, my boy, the lady who lost this pin is now under this roof. Stay here until I take it to her. I know that she will want to see you."

The hotel-keeper soon returned, and conducted the boy to a richly furnished parlor, where a stately lady stood waiting to see him.

"I thank you, my little man," she said, "for returning to me this pin, which I prize very highly. I am told that your father is dead, but that your mother still lives, and that you are doing all you can to help her in earning a living. Go to her, and tell her I say she has reason to be very proud of her boy. And you shall soon be rewarded with something better than thanks, for the Queen of Sweden is never ungrateful."

Overcome with consternation at finding himself in the presence of the queen, the boy was speechless to reply, and could only bow himself out of the room.

A few days after this occurrence, the queen and her attendants returned to Stockholm, the capital of the kingdom, and a week later came summons from the king for Otto and his mother to proceed to that city. Complying at once, they found on their arrival a pretty cottage furnished for their reception, and were [illegible] that was their home. The next day they were summoned to the palace, and presented to the king, who, learning that Otto had an ambition to become a musician, ordered that he should at once be given the best instruction obtainable. A little over three years after this [illegible] known as Sir Otto, the musical leader of the royal family, and wealth and fame were his.—The Little Corporal.

AN OLD TRICK REVIVED.

Dangerous to People Who Have Money with Which to Buy Diamonds.

"The old trick of putting diamonds so as to make yellow stones resemble the most beautiful blue white is being extensively practiced on by a gang in this town," [illegible] is a clever one, and it [illegible] even the [illegible]

"The trick is very simple. All that is needed is a cerium [illegible] and a very lower [illegible] paste. After washing the diamond you place the stone [illegible] upon its surface, upper and lower sides. Then rub the stone with a piece of cotton cloth, in order to equalize the distribution of the color, and you will find the yellow stone transformed into one of a perfect bluish tint.

"In this manner it is easy to make a $50 stone appear worth $500, as even a magnifying glass fails to show that the stone has been colored, although it washed in alcohol turpentine or benzine it, of course, reverts to its original yellow tint.

"This trick is being played daily in Kansas City. The agents of the man who is thus transforming cheap stones to gems of apparently great worth are all around town and some of them are even working neighboring cities.

"People who have recently bought diamonds at a bargain should plunge them into a benzine or alcohol bath and then rub them with a toothbrush. Their eyes may be opened to the real value of their purchases."—Jewelers' Weekly.

WHITE NATIVES OF AFRICA.

Descendants of the Foolahs Now Living in Southern Louisiana.

Most people who have read Rider Haggard's tales of the great white race in Africa doubtless think the purest fiction, but such is not the case. South of Timbuctoo and north of Kong Mountains, in the western part of Africa, live the Foolahs, the white tribe of the dark continent.

This tribe has good features, a skull molded like that of a white man, and a complexion about as dark as that of the Italians. They were great slave traders in the old days, but they made a specialty of the finest grades of captives, and but few of their own number were ever transported.

It is said that a shipload of them was once landed on the coast of Louisiana, and that the Creoles, refusing to believe them darkies, set them free and hung the slavers.

These Foolahs settled down in the marshes of southern Louisiana, and after a while became civilized, and in that part of the State to day you will find tall, dark, rather good looking white men who have all the indolence of the black African, who are sometimes as fierce as the Arab, and always hospitable and musical. These people are the descendants of the Foolahs, and their Mayflower was a slaver.

Likes a Change.

Mistress (at breakfast)—"Bridget, I told you to always bake the potatoes, not fry them."

Bridget—"Yis, mum, but it's not meself that can ate baked potatys sivin mornins in the wake."

Sweet Charity.

Vagrant—"Beg pardon, mum, but could ye have the kindness to lend me a box of sardines to open with this can-opener?"

Mrs. Oatcake—"Sorry I can't, poor fellow; but here's a dipper of water and a tract. I kinder hate to send the poor away empty-handed."—Judge.

A BEAR CAPTURES A THIEF.

The Painful Mistake Made by a Dishonest Butcher.

An Italian who was traveling in California with a bear which he had trained to wrestle and dance, stopped before a farmer's house late one afternoon, and after amusing the family with his performances obtained permission to stay all [illegible]

The bear was placed in the barn for safe keeping.

During the night the family were aroused by a terrible noise in the barn. Some one was screaming "Murder! Help!" and apparently engaged in a struggle for life.

The farmer hastened to the spot, followed by the Italian and others of the house, and found the tame bear with a man in his embrace, hugging him tightly while the poor fellow struggled frantically to escape. The bear was muzzled and could do the man no serious injury, though he was very uncomfortably situated.

The man proved to be a dishonest butcher, who had come to the barn to steal a fine calf. In the darkness he had stumbled over the bear, who had seized him and held him fast.

The Italian, learning how matters stood, called out "Hug him, Jack!" and the bear continued to hug him unmercifully, until the farmer concluded that he had been sufficiently punished, when he was released.

The story soon spread abroad, and the butcher left the neighborhood to escape the ridicule to which it subjected him.

GROWING TALL BY EXERCISE.

Influence of Various Kinds of Exercise on the Shape of the Body.

Exercise is generally taken without any direct reference to the increase of height. Thus it often happens that the gymnastic feats chiefly indulged in tend rather to check than to increase the rate of growth.

This applies particularly to the lifting of heavy weights, the use of large dumb bells, involving comparatively slow movements, and all exercises which tend to increase the supporting power of the spine and the leg bones, even though they may be exercises primarily directed to increase the muscular power of the arms.

Pulling exercises, though they tend to increase the development of the arms in length as well as in girth round the forearm chiefly, do not on the whole favor the development of length of limb. Sailors, who from boyhood upward are much employed in pulling and hauling, are on the average short men, though often the development of strength and weight resulting from their active open air lives is remarkable. We see fifteen among them under [illegible] classes [illegible] chests, shoulders and upper arms in company with lower limbs which by comparison appear almost stunted.

On the other hand, men engaged in handicrafts, occupations requiring much walking, running, leaping and the like, acquire well developed lower limbs, and are on the average taller than other classes.—Richard A. Proctor.

SAVED BY AN ACE OF HEARTS.

What Would Have Happened if the Man Hadn't a Pack of Cards.

Did you ever hear of a man's life being saved by a pack of cards? Well, here is an incident that is vouched for by many who saw the occurrence.

One of the best known and popular drummers who comes here, and he comes oft'n was one of a merry party who were engaging one night in a friendly game of "euchre," which drummers sometimes play.

After concluding the game our friend placed the cards in the left-hand pocket of his coat, which brought them directly over his heart. Soon thereafter one of the party, while carelessly handling a pistol, discharged it, and now comes the strangest part of the story.

The bullet struck the drummer in the left breast going through his clothing and also through every card in the deck except one, this one being the bottom card, or the last one of the deck. This card, strange to say was the ace of hearts, and the character in its very centre was identified by the bullet.—Americus Republican.

Pat at the Dentist's.

In a dental office not one thousand miles away, the following colloquy occurred:

"Has your tooth ever ached?"

"Oh, it just hurted me a little wunct or twice."

"Did it ever ache?"

"It pained me a bit, but shure I could stand it."

"Pat, do you know what toothache is?"

"Indade, an' I do, sor."

"Has your tooth ever ached?"

"Well, thin, it did. It kept me awake the night, bad luck to it."

"Does it ache now?"

"An' if it didn't would I be here?"

"Let Us Pray."

North Adams, Mass., has a tailor noted for his keen, pungent wit.

Not long since a well-known clergyman called at his shop with a pair of pantaloons, and asked him if they could be repaired. The knight of the shears unrolled them, held them up in a most artistic manner, carefully examined them and replied:

"Yes, yes; the knees are the best part of them."

The reverend gentleman saw the joke, smiled blandly, and gracefully bowed himself out.

Renews Her Youth.

Mrs. Phoebe Chesley, Peterson, Cody Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lamened for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and now able to do all my own housework and owe my thanks to Electric Bitters. I having renewed my youth, and for moved completely all disease are pain."

MORTGAGE SALE.

BY a certain indenture of mortgage bearing date the 7th day of January, A. D., 1887, executed by Hiram Smith of Madison township, county of Lenawee, and State of Michigan, to Frank N. Chamberlin of the same place, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Lenawee County, state of Michigan, on the 8th day of January, A. D., 1887, in Liber 117 of Mortgages, on page 3[illegible], the said Smith mortgaged to said Chamberlin all that [illegible] gan, County of Lenawee and State of Michigan, [illegible] thirty-four (34) on the plat of James Berry's subdivision of the Comstock Homestead in the city of Adrian, as per the recorded plat thereof—excepting and reserving an alley eight (8) feet in width from off the west side of lot thirty-three (33), to be used in common with owners of premises next west of the premises hereby conveyed for their mutual benefit and to be kept open so long as they or either may desire. Default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage, whereby the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is now claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of Four Hundred and Thirty-seven 87-100 dollars ($437.87), and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery have been instituted to collect the same or any part thereof. Notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale and the statute in such case made and provided, the said above mortgaged premises will be sold at public vendue to the highest bidder on the front door of the court house in the city of Adrian in said County of Lenawee, that being the place where the circuit court for said county of Lenawee is holden, on Saturday, the 6th day of May, A. D. 1888, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day.

Dated March 1st, 1888.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, on the 11th day of October, 1886, Samuel W. Temple mortgaged to Addison Hardenburg, all that parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, in the county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point in the east line of Pearl street ten (10) rods north of the north line of Shawnee street, running thence east and parallel with said north line of Shawnee street [illegible] rods distant from said north line of Shawnee street [illegible] ward on west line of said Pearl street [illegible] Ringer Factory; thence west on said south line of said land of Diessen Brothers and Nyland [illegible] rods more or less to land conveyed to said Samuel W. Temple and wife, Hattie A. to Edwin [illegible] thence south on said east line of said land so aforesaid conveyed to said Wood [illegible] half [illegible] rods to the centre of said [illegible] thence west on said south line of said [illegible] was aforesaid conveyed to said Wood [illegible] rods to the east line of Pearl street aforesaid; thence south on said east line of said Pearl street [illegible] place of beginning, with all the appurtenances thereto belonging or in anywise appertaining, the buildings thereon [illegible] and about five hundred dollars [illegible] after annexed to the same or any part thereof, to secure the payment of $2,8[illegible] with interest on the days thereof with interest to be from date [illegible] at the rate of ten per cent per annum for the first three years, and for the remaining [illegible] years interest to be paid annually at the rate of nine per cent, per annum, which mortgage was on the 14th day of October, 1886, duly recorded in office of Register of Deeds for said county of Lenawee in Liber [illegible] of mortgages on page [illegible] and 346. And whereas said mortgage contained a provision that in event any default shall be made in the payment of said interest, or any part thereof at the time therein specified, and shall remain in arrears for the space of [illegible] days, the aforesaid principal sum with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of said mortgagee, his executors, administrators and assigns, become due and payable. And whereas default has been made in the payment of interest on said mortgage to the amount of $30.60-100 and upwards and the same having remained unpaid and in arrears for a space of more than sixty days, and the undersigned, administratrix, hereby elects to declare and do hereby declare the whole amount due, both principal and interest, amounting at the date of notice to the sum of $2,868.87-100, and no proceedings having been commenced at law or in chancery for the recovery of said sum or any part thereof [illegible] has been compelled to pay the further sum of $[illegible] for insurance premiums to protect interest as such administratrix in the mortgaged premises.

Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and by virtue of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the moneys so due and owing on said mortgage, and for the interest thereon from and after the date of this notice, said insurance premiums and interest thereon as provided in said mortgage, and the costs and expense of this foreclosure, and the attorney fee provided by law, the said above described lands and premises will be sold at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of the court house in the city of Adrian in said County of Lenawee, that being the place where the circuit court for said county of Lenawee is holden, on Saturday, the 6th day of May, A. D. 1888, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day.

Dated March 1st, 1888.

ESTATE OF SANFORD HAUSE.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee—ss. At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, on Wednesday, the 9th day of May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty eight.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Sanford Hause, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Frederick B. Wood, administrator upon said estate, alleging [illegible] necessary to have the time extended for the payment of the debts of said deceased and the settlement of said estate, and praying that the time be extended one year from this date, and for such further order as to this court shall seem just and proper.

It is ordered, That Monday, the 4th day of June next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

MICHIGAN'S CANDIDATE

Gen. R. A. Alger.

The physiognomy illustrated above is that of General Russell A. Alger Ex-Gov. of Michigan whose candidacy for the office of President of the United States is being pushed by many leading Republicans, not only in Michigan but many other places in the Union. He is a representative self made man, was born in Lafayette, Medina County, Ohio, Feb 27th, 1836. He was left an orphan at a very early age, and without means had the care of a younger brother and sister. He worked by the month for farmers, got such schooling as he could winter, afterward taught district schools, studied law at Akron, was admitted to the bar in 1857, removed to Michigan in 1861 enlisted in the Second Michigan Cavalry in 1862. His military career was most brilliant. He was promoted successively for meritorious and gallant service until he reached the rank of Major General, and was finally selected by President Lincoln for a special and delicate service which took him to every army in the field. After the war he entered the lumber business at Detroit, at which with other enterprises, he has amassed a large fortune. His charities are broad and liberal. He was elected Governor of Michigan in 1884 and no one of Michigan's long line of Governors made a better record. He is a member of the Presbyterian church of Detroit, and a man who is highly respected, in business circles and by politicians whether friends or foes. The Republican party can go further, and do worse than to make the rousing standard bearer during the coming national contest.

TECUMSEH, April 12, 1888. E. N. AVERY.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM R. KING.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee—ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office in the city of Adrian, on Monday the 7th day of May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of William R. King, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Charles Euridge administrator with the will annexed, on said estate, alleging that he has paid the debts and funeral expenses of said deceased, and the expenses of administration of said estate, and praying for the allowance of his final account, for an assignment of the residue of said estate according to the provisions of said will and that he may be discharged.

It is ordered, That Monday, the 11th day of June next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

NORMAN GEDDES, Judge of Probate.

Without a doubt the finest game of ball that ever was played in Southern Michigan, outside of the league games or Detroit, was played on Lorey's Park Ridgeway, last Saturday afternoon, by the Ridgeway and Clinton teams. A nice crowd was in attendance and everything passed off quietly and cheerfully with considerable interest from all present. Both teams did hard work, every man filling his place with credit, no kicking being done by either side. The game was played in one hour and thirty minutes—score, Ridgeway 3; Clinton 2:

RIDGEWAY VS. CLINTON.

Saturday afternoon last was cool and fine for a game and quite a large crowd witnessed the sport. First innings for Clinton: Hinkley filled the box for Ridgeway. Palmer hit to third and got first, from there to third on Palmer's pass balls and scored on Codling's hit to left field. Sinclair was thrown out at first; Codling made second and took third on Palmer's pass ball; Booker fanned out; Rogers made a safe hit to right field and got to first; Codling scored and Rogers stole second. Keyser hit a grounder to the left. Rogers was caught trying to get home—two runs.

First innings for Ridgeway with Codling in the box for Clinton. Hinkley took first on being hit by the ball and stole second and third and scored on Bookers pass ball. Palmer took first on balls; Huston hit to Hardcastle and made first; Arner fouled out; Wiggins got throwed out at first—one run.

Second innings for Clinton. Hardcastle hit a grounder to Hinkley and was thrown out at first; Larzelere fanned out; Kirchgessner fanned out also.—no runs.

Second innings for Ridgeway. Temple flew out to Palmer; Linn flew out to Rogers; Biggs hit safe to first but was caught with the ball when leading off—no runs.

Third innings for Clinton. Palmer fanned out; Codling got out by hitting a fly to Huston; Sinclair hit to Hinkley and was thrown out at first.—no runs.

Third innings for Ridgeway. Nichols fanned out; Booker not holding the ball on Hinkley's third strike he took first and got to second on an error; Palmer fanned out; Hinkley stole third on Codling and scored on Booker's pass ball. Huston took first on balls and was thrown out by Booker to Rogers—one run.

Fourth innings for Clinton. Booker was thrown out at first by Hinckley; Rogers took first on Palmer not holding third strike and made second; Keyser hit to first and got out; Palmer took third; Hardcastle struck to first and was out.—no runs.

Fourth innings for Ridgeway. Arner hit to Codling and was thrown out at first; Wiggins hit to right field and made first and stole second on Boocker; Temple fanned out; Wiggins stole third and scored on Linn's hit to right field; Biggs hit a grounder to right field and was thrown at first.—one score.

Fifth innings for Clinton. Larzelere hit to Wiggins and was caught out at first; Kirchgessner fanned out; Palmer hit to Biggs but got first on error and was caught at second by Palmer and Wiggins.—no runs.

Fifth innings for Ridgeway. Nichols hit a grounder to Sinclair and was thrown out at first; Hinkley got to first on balls; Palmer was thrown out at first; Huston hit a grounder to Rogers and made first on an error; Hinkley took second and stole third on Codling; Huston also stole second on Codling; Arner hit to Hardcastle and got first; Wiggins hit to Kirchgessner and was caught at first—no runs.

Sixth innings for Clinton. Codling hit to Wiggins and was thrown out at first; Sinclair hit to Hinkley and was thrown out at first; Booker hit a grounder to Hinkley and started for first but was put out by Hinkley touching him on the line—no runs Sixth innings for Ridgeway. Temple hit to Hardcastle and made third on wild throws; Linn got out to Palmer; Temple got out trying to get home and Biggs fanned out—no runs.

Seventh innings for Clinton. Rogers hit to right field and got to second and made third on Palmer's pass ball; Keyser hit safe to first and Rogers was run down by Huston while trying to get home; Larzelere made a big hit to Linn and was out—no runs.

Seventh innings for Ridgeway. Nichols hit a grounder to Codling and made first; Hinkley hit safe to first; Nichols made third; Palmer fouled out; Huston flew out to Larzelere and Arner flew out to short stop—no runs.

Eighth innings for Clinton. Kirchgessner fanned out; Palmer hit to Arner and was caught out; Palmer muffed Codling's third strike but was thrown out at first—no runs.

Eighth innings for Ridgeway. Wiggins hit to Codling and made first, stole second and third on Booker; Temple fanned out; Linn fanned out; Biggs hit to Palmer and was out—no runs.

Ninth innings for Clinton. Palmer muffed Sinclair's third strike but threw him out at first; Booker hit to Wiggins and was thrown out at first; Rogers fanned out—no runs.

The Detroit News of Thursday takes a general view of the congressional situation in this State and speaks of the second district as follows:

"The second district Republicans will have no difficulty in making choice of a standard bearer. Capt. Allen will be renominated. He attested his popularity in two gallant fights for the place he now holds, going down before Nathaniel B. Eldredge in 1884 by only 54 votes, and giving Lester H. Salsbury, of Lenawee, the go-by in 1886 with 1,032 of a plurality. In the house he has already established the reputation of a man with brains, lungs, tact and determination. He has added to the popularity which gave him two nominations and one term in Congress. It is among the probabilities that Mr. Salsbury will again enter the list and try conclusions with Capt. Allen. In the last encounter the fusionists were prone to look upon Salsbury as a man having a walkover, and there was some excuse for this in his excellent record, as well as the ease with which he had grasped such political honors as he coveted. Chas. R. Whitman, at present a regent of the university through the grace of a land slide that kept Michigan Republicans hustling like beavers to dig out of, is also among the threatened, and may be pittled against the gallant captain, whose pride is in the representation of an agricultural district."

Chas. W. Parker returned to Detroit Monday, greatly improved in health.

The ladies of the M. E. Church will hold their next social May 30th, at the residence of Rev. W. P. Wastell, afternoon and evening. Supper in the afternoon from five until half past six. Ice cream from six until nine. The exercises at the cemetery will close at about four o'clock, giving good time to attend the exercises and then refresh themselves with a cup of coffee or tea at the social. We understand a program is being prepared for the evening. Come one and all.

FRANK ROBBINS'S SHOW.

The grand circus which will exhibit here on the 29th inst., next week Tuesday, has been greatly improved since its last exhibition in Tecumseh, and is now one of the very best shows on the road. The following press extracts will give a good idea of the character of the performance.

Robbins' Circus opened auspiciously on Saturday night with a set of novelties which are rarely seen in a circus. The American Institute was overcrowded, and every degree of satisfaction was expressed at the performance which was well worth the price of admission.—The Dramatic Times, Dec. 31, 1887.

Large attendances fill the spacious amphitheatre of Robbins' popular Winter circus at the American Institute at every afternoon and evening performance, and indications point to a very successful season. The programme comprises a series of startling equestrian, acrobatic, equilibrial and specialty acts. The interior of the structure is comfortably heated by steam pipes, and the menagerie which encircles the seating portion of the circus has become a very enjoyable promenade. Mr Robbins has a good circus and an extensive collection of wild animals, which thus far have given unqualified satisfaction at popular prices. A change of bill is made every week.—The Sunday Mercury, January 8, 1888.

DAN RICE PRAISES THE CIRCUS.

"Uncle Dan" Rice sat in a box at the Robbins Winter Circus, in the American Institute building, on Friday night and talked circus lore by the yard. In the course of his observations he remarked, "Well, Robbins ain't a robbin' anybody with this show." Indeed, the venerable clown was greatly pleased with the Winter Circus. The receipts during the past week have, Mr. Robbins says fully fortified his belief that a clean old fashioned circus could be made one of the prominent features of New York's round of winter amusements.—New York Tribune.

Auction Sale of the Millard Farm.

The Hannan real estate exchange will sell at public auction on Thursday, June 14th, 1888, at one o'clock P. M., on the premises, that well known farm, known as the Millard farm, of four hundred and twenty-seven acres, situated one mile southwest of Manchester Mich. Parties of ten or over within a radius of twenty miles, will receive free transportation to and from the sale. A suitable lunch and other refreshments will be served free of charge. See advertisement in another column.

GOT THE BEST OF THE DOCTOR.

W. F. Beyer, Garretsville, Ohio, says: "My wife has been troubled with Catarrh a long time, but have with what remedies we had, and what the doctor could do, kept the upper hand of it until this fall, when everything failed. Her throat was raw as far as one could see, with an incessant cough, when I invested my dollar in a bottle of your Papillon Catarrh Cure as a last resort. To-day she is free from cough, throat all healed and entirely cured." Papillon (extract of flax) Catarrh Cure effects cures when all others fail. Large bottles $1.00.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, MAY 24

Don't be discouraged. Summer weather will come along before the 4th of July.

Settle the rivalry between Burt and Fisher by sending them both to Congress. Then nominate Yaple for Governor. We believe this would be a winning ticket.

As "local option" has been knocked out the new tax law is now in force in Lenawee county. If we cannot have prohibition, then let the license law [illegible] and fines enforced.

Amid all the smoke of the tariff discussion, this fact stands forth more patent every day that the business necessities of the country demand a speedy reduction of taxation. Wipe out the war taxes, gentlemen.

The woman suffragists are first in the field with a Presidential ticket, Lockwood and Love. As the first man on this ticket is a woman, the firm of Lockwood & Love is a very appropriate and happy combination.

Yaple and Burt seem to be the two leading candidates for the gubernatorial nomination on the Democratic ticket. Either of them could probably be elected. Burt would poll more votes in the Saginaw Valley, and Yaple run better in the Western rural counties. Take the whole state together it is about a stand off between them.

The decision of the Supreme Court annulling the local option law is based wholly upon technical grounds. It does not attack the principal of County prohibition at all. It is a rebuke to hasty and ill-considered legislation, not a decision against the prohibitory principle. Local option has been "knocked out" for the nonce, that is true, but the next legislature will be called upon to enact a similar law that will hold water.

The Gresham movement is developing considerable strength lately, but his nomination is not at all probable. The Sherman element is opposed to him and also the Blaine element. One of these two factions is almost certain to nominate its own man or to control the nominee. The Sherman-Harrison combination will nominate either Sherman or Harrison. The Blaine-Allison combination will put up either Blaine or Allison. These two combinations will fight out the contest between them. Should the convention take the bits in its teeth and smash both of these slates, there may be a chance for Gresham or Alger.

It is a fact that the removal of wool duties is favored by the leading carpet and blanket manufacturers, the Government statisticians, a strong minority of wool growers both east and west of the Mississippi, practically the whole of the importers, many of the leading dealers of Boston and many of the largest woolen manufacturers. And it is also a fact that the wool growing industry has averaged to prosper better under low than high tariffs, for the reason that when manufactures are confined to the home market for their products, there is always a large surplus of wool which they can not use, and the prices are necessarily forced down. It is also a fact that the larger part of the wool which they export, they must import anyway to mix with that raised in this country and the effect of the tariff is, therefore, to needlessly increase the cost of their factories without protecting anybody.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

What will be the practical effect of the Supreme Court's decision on the local option law. In the wet counties it will have little effect one way or the other. In the dry counties it will increase the Prohibition and Democratic votes at the expense of the Republican party. Hundreds of temperance republicans will be disgusted and drift into the prohibition ranks. Temperance Democrats regarded the law as a republican party dodge, intended simply to title that party over another election. So far as practical results are concerned the temperance cause is about as well off under Boyle as with an inoperative constitutional local option law. The temperance Democrats will therefore give their attention in this campaign to the great questions of and and labor, tax and tariff reform. The decision makes it not only possible, but very probable, that the Democracy will carry Michigan this fall.

TARIFF AGITATION AND BUSINESS.

Tariff agitation unsettles business, and for that reason inconsiderate men cry out against tariff agitation. From thirty to forty years ago slavery agitation unsettled business, and for that men generally denounced slavery agitation. Instead of meeting the inevitable issue, accepting the irrepressible conflict and deciding it, commercial and trade circles demanded that slavery discussion must be silenced to promote trade, and so strong was the business sentiment against slavery agitation that a highly respected Republican Mayor closed a public hall in Philadelphia against Curtis, who was to discuss slavery, but slavery agitation speedily forced commerce, finance and trade to accept the issue and throw their whole moral and material power into the conflict to efface slavery from the escutcheon of the Union.

Why is there tariff agitation now? It is not arbitrarily forced upon business and the country by Congress. On the contrary, both the great political parties distinctly declared to the people in their last national platforms that tariff revision and revenue reduction must come to relieve our industries. And how have those pledges been respected by Congress? The Democratic party attempted down tariff revision in the last Congress and failed, and the Republican party has solidly opposed all modification of our tax laws both in the last and the present Congress. When both parties solemnly pledged themselves to the country for revenue reform four years ago, we were then exacting from the industries of the nation scores of millions annually in excess of the legitimate expenditures of the government and the government has continued to collect scores of millions annually from our industries for four years in the face of the sacredly plighted faith of both Republicanism and Democracy in favor of tariff revision and revenue reduction.

Is it surprising, therefore, that tariff agitation cannot be suppressed when the whole people as voiced through the great party organizations, are pledged to tariff revision and revenue reduction? If every member of Congress and all the political leaders of all parties were to unite in demanding that tariff agitation shall cease, it would only make the people the more vehemently demand the just modification of our war tariff and the reduction of our war taxes. Tariff agitation is upon us because the demand for it is so imperious that all parties bow to it, and because, nearly a quarter of a century after peace had succeeded war, we are maintaining the highest tariff duties and the highest taxes ever known in any period of peace in the history of the Republic. These scores of millions of needless annual taxes are exacted from the industries of the land, and for what? They give no protection to capital; they have long since ceased to stimulate any healthy enterprise, and we have tariff agitation because our manufacturers are oppressed by taxes which largely increase the cost of their products and narrow their markets, and because labor is oppressively taxed for the common necessaries of life, thereby diminishing the value of wages and creating unrest and often a disturbance in industrial circles.

There is one and only one way to end tariff agitation, and that is to demand prompt tariff revision and revenue reduction. All parties confess the necessity of reform; none to justify or even excuse the present needless and extortionate taxes which crowd the public treasury with hundreds of millions of money that is not wanted by the government, and that is wanted in the varied channels of commerce industry and trade, and tariff agitation will become more and more earnest and widespread until the distinct promises made to the people by all parties shall be honestly fulfilled. The way to stop tariff agitation, therefore, is to hasten inevitable tariff revision and revenue reduction. Until they shall be attained business will be paralyzed by uncertainty, and the longer Congress delays the fulfillment of the pledges made by all sides by the people the longer will there be inactivity in business. Let our business men no longer seek to hinder what must come, but let them get down to assist the practical tariff revision, and urge it upon their Representatives. If the Mills bill fails to give full protection to the wages of American labor it is wrong and should be corrected, but assailing tariff revision as free trade in the face of the plainest facts is a plain confession that the pending bill cannot be successfully assailed. Doubtless it has imperfections; but whoever has pointed them out in a practical, business like manner and asked for their correction? Where are the Republican leaders, who are equally pledged with the Democrats to tariff revision, but they offer no measure to correct the inequalities or wrongs of the Mills bill, they are silent as to their solemn promise to revise the tariff and reduce taxes, and all that the country hears from them is the parrot cry of free trade, in which they have no more believed by the country than they believe in it themselves.

Tariff agitation is now confined only with tariff revision and revenue reduction, and by [illegible] politicians all around a circle down to [illegible] practical reformers, the interests of our whole [illegible] let the [illegible] discussion [illegible] them, and [illegible] end tariff [illegible] revision and [illegible] upon our [illegible] let them [illegible] business [illegible] prosperity.

THE ARTFUL CANVASSER.

A Hint for Machine-Tired Men Who Travel with Books.

I went straight to the minister's house, on reaching Sleepyville (said a canvasser for a religious weekly). Never think of going anywhere else first, my boy, if you are canvassing for a religious paper.

The minister was a nice fellow, and I booked him early in the day. He pressed me to stay to supper. It was warm, the minister was entertaining, his quarters comfortable, so I stayed.

After supper the minister had to go to prayer meeting. He asked me to go along. It was not my one to refuse. I went.

After there had been some praying done and a hymn had been sung, the minister rose and looking at me said:

"We will now ask Brother ——," meaning me, "to lead in prayer."

I thought mighty quick for about ten seconds; my thinking flywheel flew around. It was a question of policy I was debating in that interval. Then I said:

"For a reason which I shall be very glad to explain after the meeting is over, I must beg to be excused from leading the prayer."

The pastor accepted my declination gravefully and called upon somebody else. After the meeting was over I went up to the minister and said:

"Reverend sir, I did not accept your kind invitation to lead in prayer was that I was afraid my motives might be misunderstood. You see, my business is to obtain subscriptions for a certain religious paper. If I had led in prayer some members of your congregation would have been sure to have suspected me of trying to advertise my papers in church. Neither I nor my employers would tolerate such a suspicion for a moment."

The minister was profuse in his praise of my straightforward methods. I think he must have said something about the matter to his congregation, for, with hardly an exception they subscribed for the paper.

Verily, virtue is its own reward.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

THE MARKET IN HAVANA.

A Vast Variety of Food Found in It.

The visitor is astounded at the vast varieties of food that can be found in the market at Havana. There is nothing to compare with it in a single market of any American or European city.

Briefly, every article displayed in the most sumptuous American markets, including every known brand of American canned goods, is here, and besides this, every fruit, vegetable, herb and flower produced in this land of indescribable luxuriance, and that, too, not in large seasons, but every hour in every day in the year.

Think of twenty-six varieties of sweet potatoes constantly exposed for sale. There are between forty and fifty varieties of berries and vegetables used in salad-making alone.

Nor can one form any conception, until it is seen, of the Cuban supply of food birds. I was shown and counted myself eighty-three different kinds of birds, comprising thirty-seven distinct species; while the magnificence and lusciousness of vegetables and fruits are positively beyond comprehension by us who exist in rigorous climes.

And here the concrete realism of daily life blends pleasantly with one's most vivid imaginings until through the warp and woof of conscious comprehension are wrought the bitter and the sweet, the cloud and the sunshine, of Cuban memories to tantalize ever.

The prevalence of scrofulous taint in the blood is much more universal than many are aware. Indeed, but few persons are free from it. Fortunately, however, we have in Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the most potent remedy ever discovered for this terrible affliction.

IMPORTANT.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and carriage Hire and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot. Elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1.00 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

In connection with the fact that Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic has had the largest sale, it has been the most successful remedy ever before the public for all blood troubles and diseases of the stomach, liver and kidneys. Fifty cents buys a bottle of Dr. Geo. Ferguson. Mrs. Emma Brown, Lima Ohio, says four bottles of Jones Red Clover Tonic has cured me of sick headache that I have been subject to for over nine years.

Professional Ignorance

Nothing is more common, nor less true, than for physicians to tell patients in the first stages of heart disease that the trouble is only nervous, etc., and of no account. A little knowledge is a dangerous thing as shown by the great number of people who die of heart disease when its existence is not suspected. Take warning. Don't neglect the first symptoms, and if you would avoid sudden death, angina pectoris, etc., take Dr. Miles' New Cure before it is too late. Sold at Becker & Hall's drug store.

We especially invite the attention of mothers and daughters to page 9, of our medical pamphlet.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

CURES ALL HUMORS,

from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or "Thick Neck," and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vigorous strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terrible fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "CONSUMPTION CURE," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Sold by Druggists at $1.00, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

RAISING QUAIL.

Notes from Practical Experience in Stocking Game Grounds.

Some years ago I brought from North Carolina to New Jersey some fifteen or twenty pairs of quail to put out on my own place. I kept them in my barn from February to the middle of April, feeding them on split peas, their favorite food in North Carolina, and giving them free access to water.

I found they became very tame, and when they were turned out in April they continued to remain for some time in the vicinity of the barn.

The place was very favorably situated for stocking, a stream running along the edge of a wood, with cultivated land on one side, at intervals patches of good woodcock grounds and two or three dry bottoms of old mill dams overgrown with alders and raspberries.

I had food scattered in various places for them until they paired. The most of them raised breeds, but they continued to be much tamer than the native quail, and as a consequence were nearly shot the first season, some of them before the law was up, by outside parties, my intention being made known to the fact that the land was posted.

From my observation I would say peas constitute good food for quail. Patches of peas and buckwheat should be sown in sheltered places on the grounds where birds are turned out. When these are fairly started it is a good plan to scatter light branches and bramble over them, so as to furnish shelter from hawks while the birds are feeding. Thick patches of bramble furnish the best shelter.

There should be turned out as early as possible an equal number of cocks and hens. It is said that unmated cocks break up the nests and destroy the eggs of the mates they could not win.

The birds should not be on hand long enough to become familiar with man and so become tame and dependent. If they become so—and they can be made as chickens—some method should be used to make them wild before they are shot at.—Forest and Stream.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

The Philosopher at a Tavern A Bar-Keeper's Estimate of the Right Drink for Him.

Henry Wilson used to tell a good story about Ralph Waldo Emerson's attempt to "live like other folks."

Stopping while this fit was on him at a country tavern where he was to lecture, instead of retiring to meditate on freeze in his own cold and cheerless way, he manfully sat in the barroom like the rest of mankind.

He endured the tobacco smoke as well as he could, and watched, no doubt with a curiosity as lively as M. du Chaillu's on his first visit to a cannibal feast among the Fans, the actions of the men who "sat around." He saw one after another walk up to the bar and demand and swallow a glass of whiskey; and, true to his determination to be for once like other men, the great philosopher—so the tale goes on—at last rose, and no doubt with a certain degree of diffidence, but no doubt also with a sufficiency of courage in his port and countenance, advanced to the bar, and in a voice modulated as nearly as he could after those he had just heard, demanded a "whiskey skin!"

The barkeeper, a man of high principle, looked into the philosopher's face for a moment, and then said: "You don't want whiskey, you want ginger-pop," and accordingly administered that mild and harmless stimulant.

THE CZAR'S PALACES.

Information from St. Petersburg Historic Reminiscences.

Of course, in St. Petersburg one must see everything connected with Peter the Great, even to the skeleton of his valet, which has been preserved.

The cathedral which the great monarch founded is known as the Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul. Its spire is surmounted by a cross that glitters in the sunlight 383 feet above the street—30 feet higher than St. Paul's in London.

Here all the dead sovereigns of Russia, with the sole exception of Peter II, are buried, many of them noted for such barbarous cruelty as one shudders to read of. Even the great Peter had his eldest son put to torture under examination for treason—a torture so severe that its victim soon after died from the effects of it.

At the distance of a short drive from St. Petersburg is a charming miniature palace, owned by the Empress, and known by the name of "My Own." It is in the midst of lovely grounds, and is a happy retiring place for the royal family whenever they choose to come to it.

In another palace, the Peterhof, there are in a single room over 800 female portraits taken by the order of Catherine II, from women in different provinces of the Empire.—St. Petersburg Letter.

His Home Thrust.

"I see a buttonless shirt advertised here, John," said a wife, looking up from a paper; "what kind of a shirt is that?"

"The kind I wear," was the reply. And the wife resumed her reading.

Anti-Marriage Insurance Wanted.

Miss Ethel—"Doesn't it! If I had known there was such a gale, I would have——"

Miss Clara—"Remained at home?"

Miss Ethel—"No, put on my striped stockings."

He Provides a Way of Hitching a Horse to a Grasshopper.

Miss Cooper, a daughter of the American novelist, states that when in Paris, she saw a French translation of her father's tale, "The Spy," in which there were several mistakes, but one of them was such that it was almost incredible that any one could possibly have been guilty of it.

The residence of Mr. Wharton, one of the characters who figure in the story, is spoken of by the author as "The Locusts."

Now, the translator had been evidently ignorant of the circumstance of there being any species of trees bearing this name. Having, therefore, looked out the word in his dictionary, and finding the definition to be "given as 'les sauterelles'"—grasshoppers—thus he rendered it in the text.

Presently, however, he came across a paragraph in the novel in which it was stated that a visitor to the house of Mr. Wharton had tied his horse to a locust.

Then it might be naturally supposed that the translator would at once have discovered his error. Not a bit of it! His reasoning would appear to have been somewhat on a par with that of a celebrated countryman of his, when he declared that "if the facts do not agree with the theory, so much the worse for the facts."

Nevertheless the writer seems to have been conscious that some explanation was due of so extraordinary a statement as that a horseman had secured his steed to a grasshopper. Consequently he went on to gravely inform his readers tha these insects grow to an enormous size; and that, in this case, one of these—dead and stuffed, of course—had been stationed at the door for the convenience of visitors on horseback.—Cornhill Magazine.

THE DRUMMER WAS CRUSHED

A Fish Merchant from St. Louis Does the Job.

A Chicago drummer balanced his chin on the edge of the seat in front of him and tickled a sandy-haired passenger's ear with the remark:

"You've been in Chicago, of course?"

"Where?"

"Chicago."

"An uncertain look came into the sandy-haired man's eyes.

"Let me see," he mused retrospectively; "'pears to me I must have passed through there. I've traveled a good deal. I know I've heard of the name before. What line of road is it on?"

"Line of road. Why, it's the biggest railroad center on earth."

"Not bigger'n Crestline, Ohio, is it?" asked the passenger with an amused expression. "I've seen four trains to once at Crestline, waitin' to start off. Is Chicago a place where the trains stop for dinner?"

"Naw," said the disgusted drummer; "Chicago is a place where the passengers stop for dinner."

"Of course, that's what I meant," explained the red-haired man gently. "Fact is," he went on with confidential frankness, "I've traveled so much and been in so many different places in my life that I don't pretend to remember more'n a quarter of 'em. What's the name of the hotel in Chicago?"

"There ain't any," said the drummer, gloomily.

Then he walked forward to the filter, filled his mouth full of water, gargled his throat, whooshed the liquid on the floor and hung his leg over the corner of the coal box.

"Who is that evil-eyed, pink-haired, limpy legged, prairie-eared microbe at the other end of the car?" he asked of the conductor, who was passing through the train.

"Do you mean that gentleman looking out of the window?"

"Ya'as."

"He's a fish merchant from St. Louis."—Detroit Post.

QUICKEST COURTSHIP ON RECORD.

Philadelphia not the Slow City It Is Considered To Be.

Outsiders may consider Philadelphia a slow place, but in some matters it can hold its own against most American cities.

For example, here is a true story of a courtship and marriage that took place recently.

A certain young lady went out to make some calls. On her way she met a friend who suggested that she should go to the matinee with him. She accepted the invitation and he bought the tickets.

At the end of the first act he proposed to her. She refused, thinking he was only joking.

When the curtain went down for the second act he renewed the proposal, and so earnestly that she asked time to consider it, which was willingly given.

No sooner was the third act finished than she softly murmured "Yes."

After the matinee was over the engaged couple hailed a passing street car and crossed to Camden, where they were married.

The whole affair occupied three hours and fifty minutes.

But No "Cop" To Flirt with Nurse.

The present Emperor of China, when he was a baby, had 80 nurses, 25 fanners, 25 bearers for his palanquin, 10 umbrella holders, 20 physicians and surgeons, 7 chief and 28 inferior cooks, 50 waiters and messengers, 50 dressers and other servants, and attendants to the number of 400 or more.

His spiritual welfare was looked after by a confessor, 55 astrologers, 16 tutors (all of high rank and rel[illegible]).—St. Stephen's Gazette.

A Fifteenth Amendment.

Mrs. Van Cott recently related the following prayer, which was offered in her behalf by a colored brother in one of her ardent meetings:

"O Lord! Send dy angel to pin de wings on Sister Bancot's heels, dat she may fly roun' de world preachin' de eberlastin' gospel!" And one added: "Lord, give wings on her shoulders, too, or the preaching will not have effect, for she'll fly upside down!"

A Good Reason for It.

Lightning never strikes twice in the same place. Neither does a mule.

The reason for this is because the place is never there after the first strike.—Drake's Magazine.

A Rare Talent.

"A very clever girl that Miss Blum that just went out."

"Clever! Why she never opens her mouth."

"That's where she's clever."

SCENE FROM THE COUNTRY STORE.

How People Do Business Where They Have Time To Bargain.

This is the way they do business at the cross roads store, where they have plenty of time for it. The system has not yet gone into effect in the large dry goods [illegible] justs her glasses and looks at the three pieces of gingham on the shelf.

"Anything I can show you to-day, Mrs. Skinner?" asked the proprietor coming forward with his mouth full of pickles and cheese.

"I dunno," says Mrs. Skinner.

"Got a fine line o' ginghams just in."

"I dunno but I might look at 'em. No charge for that, I reckon?"

"Oh, no of course not. Now, here's a mighty fine piece o' green and red plaid."

"I dunno as I like plaid."

"Well, here's a blue and white check."

"I hadn't calculated on gittin' a check."

"Well, now, here's a green and white piece."

"I've so many green and white ginghams, I thought I'd like something different this time."

"They're mighty good colors, Mrs. Skinner."

"I've an idea the plaid'll run in washin'."

"What! Gingham like that run? That gingham'll wash long's there's a rag of it, and never fade."

"I ain't so sure o' that."

"Chaw a piece and see. No'm, that gingham'll bile like muslin. Don't you see it says 'fast colors' on the label?"

"Aw, that don't count fer nothin' nowadays. How much is it?"

"Twenty-five cents a yard."

"How much?"

"Twenty-five cents."

"Fer gingham like that?"

"Yes'm, an' cheap at that."

"My land! I've bought better gingham a-many an' a-many a time fer a shillin'."

"It wasn't sech gingham as this."

"It was a leettle better if anything."

"I guess yer mistaken. This gingham cost me twenty-four cents."

"Then you got dreadfully cheated."

"It'd be a bargain at thirty cents."

"Pshaw, man, you crazy? Now, looke here, Sam Peters, I'll give you twenty cents a yard fer that gingham, and it's all I will give."

"Can't doit, Mrs. Skinner. Say twenty-three cents and I'll do it, but I'll lose money."

"Twenty's all I'll give."

"I'll split the difference and say twenty-two and a half."

"Taint worth it, Sam."

"It's with two bits."

"Pshaw!"

"Deed it is."

"I kin git better gingham fer fifteen cents in town."

"Not much you can't."

"I know I kin."

"I'll give you sixteen cents for all you can git for twenty cents good as this."

"I'll give you twenty-six cents if you'll throw in a card o' hooks and eyes."

"Can't do it."

"Well, say a spool of thread."

"I'm losin' money as it is."

"Law, Sam, I'll bet you make ten cents a yard on that gingham. You kin put in a card of buttons, anyhow."

"I'll say six buttons."

"Why can't you make it a dozen?"

"Oh, I'm losin' money now."

"How you talk!"

"It's so."

"Well, gimme a yard an' the six buttons an' a stick of peppermint candy for the baby. But I'm jest shamefully cheated. Take your pay in eggs, won't you?"

"No, I couldn't."

"Ain't eggs same ez money?"

"No'p."

"Well, you storekeepers do beat all at makin' a bargain. You don't leave a body a foot to stand on."—Detroit Free Press.

SUPERFICIAL ACQUIREMENTS.

Some Practical Suggestions for Parents.

The boy or girl who can give the name of every river and the height of every mountain in Asia, the age of every reigning sovereign in Europe, the date of every battle in America, can hardly be as well off for all this burdensome knowledge as one who knows the elements of human physiology and anatomy, who is taught more of the knowledge useful in after life, and can tell how to help himself or another in case of accident or emergency.

The boy who is to go into active life and the girl who is to become head of a household, will have little occasion and less opportunity to use the greater part of the "crammed" lessons so industriously accumulated during their school years.

A fair knowledge of the rules that are at the bottom of all healthful activity, a general acquaintance with anatomy and a well grounded taste for natural sciences, will all grow into and become part of their daily lives, and such things are far less likely to make pretentious men or women than that kind of smattering "memorized" facts and dates and "words" which is too often the penalty of superficial study.

CORRECTING AMERICAN HISTORY.

Establishing a New Date for the Battle of Trenton.

Mr. Andrew Quinton, of Trenton, New Jersey, asserts that the date on the Washington monument, Baltimore, fixing the battle of Trenton as having been fought on December 25, 1776, is incorrect. He says the battle took place on the day following, December 26. Mr. Quinton thinks the date should be changed on the monument so as to read "Battle of Trenton, December 26." Bancroft in his "History of the United States," Lossing in his "Field Book of the Revolution," Carrington in his "Battles of the American Revolution," Bryant in his "Popular History of the United States," and Raum in his "History of New Jersey," all agree that the battle of Trenton was fought on the morning of December 26, 1776.

The American troops started to cross the Delaware on the evening of December 25, but it was 5 o'clock the next morning when they landed on the opposite shore. It was about 8 o'clock when the action began.

The Good Man's Mistake.

"Young man," he said solemnly, "do you know that the Lord is thy shepherd?"

"Er—is he?"

"Yes. What flock do you belong to, my dear young friend?"

"See here, old man," said his dear young friend indignantly, "you mus' take me for a mutton head!"

Truthful Woman.

Women are naturally truthful, especially when they are talking about another woman that they don't like.—Somerville Journal.

Hominy and Shrimps for Breakfast.

If there is one thing that can compensate the average Charlestonian for being robbed of his morning nap by the insatiable and conscienceless raw shrimp fiend, it is the reflection that at any rate he will have breakfast of hominy and shrimps, and that [illegible] man in Charleston. For neither Mr. Vanderbilt nor his $10,000 acrobat can get up a shrimp breakfast "as she is cooked," in Charleston, at the frozen North.

It is admitted that there are no shrimps in America at least, that can compare with the Charleston shrimp in delicacy of flavor or in tenderness of flesh. There are prawns and shrimps elsewhere, perhaps, but the little Charleston shrimp is as far ahead of them as Hyperion to a satyr, and one of his principal peculiarities is the fact that he will not submit to be carried away from home.

He generally puts in an appearance about early April and he stays with us all the summer. He never consents to be sent away from home.—Charleston (S. C.) News.

Thankful for a Small Blessing.

Young Victor, who had been for three weeks lying ill with pneumonia, asked one day to see his overcoat. It was brought out with no little wonderment by his mother.

"Hang it on the foot of the bed, won't you, mamma?" he asked.

"Yes, my boy, if you wish, but why do you want to have it out here?"

"Just to look at it, mamma. It's been such a long time since I've seen it."

ALUM BAKING POWDERS.

A List of those most prominently Sold.

The following are the names of some of the baking powders published by the public authorities as being made from alum:

There are doubtless many other brands of alum baking powder besides those so far examined and named by the authorities. Most of the baking powders sold in bulk, by weight, and all sold with a gift or premium are said to be of this description.

Prof. H. A. Mott, United States Government Chemist, says: "In my opinion the use of alum as a constituent of a baking powder should be prohibited by law."

Harper's Magazine for June is an example of what a magazine for early summer ought to be. It contains a judicious mixture of the best things in literature, and is thus suited to all the moods of a June day. Fiction is provided for lazy hours by W. D. Howells, Henry James, and William Black, and there is much charming poetry. Neither are solid articles for serious reading lacking, and the artistic features of the number are most delightful. Reinhart, Abbey, Charles Graham, E. P. Sanguinetti, Alfred Parsons, W. H. Hyde, and F. Barnard all contribute specimens of their best work. The frontispiece is an excellent portrait of the late Mrs. Craik, and belongs to the article on "London as a Literary Centre," which abounds in good likenesses of English novelists.

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at

How to Make and Maintain Good Thoroughfares.

The fact is notorious that in the matter of its public highways, Michigan is far behind many of its sister states, and despite its superiority in many points that mark the scale of progress and civilization, its country roads, as a rule, may almost be set down as relics of barbarism. We find an article from the pen of a correspondent of the Cultivator and Country Gentleman, so full of common sense and practical suggestions on this point that we gladly reprint it:

One reason why our roads throughout the country are not kept in better condition, is, that incompetent overseers are appointed, men who have little or no practical knowledge or interest in the work they are called upon to do, often, in fact, doing more harm than good. We require of ministers, doctors, lawyers and teachers that they hold certificates showing that they have a knowledge of well-established principles, which in a measure, insures their continuing the work of their predecessors. Now cannot we adopt this idea in our road system? [illegible] our state boards of agriculture to prepare a text book containing rules for road overseers to observe, and general information on the subject of road making. Then have the road law amended so that each township shall elect at their regular township election (or have appointed by the township committee) a superintendent of roads. The person seeking the office should previously pass an examination and hold a certificate given by a county board of examiners, showing that he has the necessary qualifications. If this course were adopted it seems to me that it would be a step in the right direction. The compensation by the day or year, as might be thought best, should be generous enough, and the position permanent enough, to induce persons of intelligence to aspire to the position, and thoroughly post themselves on the subject.

In choosing an overseer a live man should be sought, with good common sense, considerable practical experience in working roads and handling men and teams, and some business ability. The present road overseers might be continued as aids to the township superintendent. It would not be out of the way to exact of them also a certain knowledge of their duties, for which a lower grade certificate might be given. The township should own plows, scrapers, carts and small tools, and a good place to store them, under the eye of the superintendent.

Then there should be two classes of roads. The main roads between towns and cities should be made and kept in order by the county, and in charge of a county board with an expert superintendent. The cross roads should [illegible] by the townships and under the control of the township committee. The reason for this is towns and cities are largely benefited by having good roads leading to them and should bear part of the expense. If they are left to the townships they would, because of their poverty, often put them in that condition which the travel demands, and their gaps so often prove the poor links in spring.

It is possible to have a good earth road for nine months in the year, and passable at all seasons, which good days are the pleasantest of all roads to ride over, easy for the horses feet, and free from the hard gritty noise of stone roads. All surface stones larger than a hen's egg, either in the middle of the road or on the sidewalks, are a disfigurement and should be dug out and carted to some spongy, wet place, and used to make an underdrain in the center of the road and running parallel with it. The drain should be two or three feet deep and two feet wide. An earthern tile should be laid in the bottom and the stone used for filling up to within one foot of the surface. There should be a free outlet for the water from the drain. The road scrapers, especially some lately invented, are valuable implements when rightfully used where the roads are not too stony. They put the earth where it is most needed, in roots, holes and depressions, and leave the road nicely leveled. There are times when they can be used more effectively than at others; in the winter occasionally when the ground is bare, and dry winds and a few warm days have taken the frost out of the surface and left it dry and loose, good work can be done. In the spring, as soon as the roads are dry enough and before the ground becomes settled and hard and the weeds and grass start, is the choice season to work the earth up from the ditches to the center, make a good crown and leave it leveled. Also every month through the summer and fall as soon after rain as the ground becomes dry enough.

In laying out a new road, or commencing to make good an old one, time is not lost fixing the course, the right grade, direction for the water to run, width of wagon bed, sidewalks, etc. When once these are wisely fixed they should in time be strictly adhered to. An ordinary country road should in after time be strictly adhered to. An ordinary country road should be wide enough for two carriages or wagons to roll along abreast without danger of interfering, and then a more abrupt slope to the bottom of the ditches on either side. Turnpiking or rounding up the road should be done before the first of Aug. to give ground time to settle before winter sets in. It should be well done, rounded up say two or three feet above the bottom of the ditches, so it will not have to be disturbed again for years. Ruts and holes afterwards should be filled up by carting gravel or earth from some hill near by. Instead of rounding the roads on the hills or high ground, it is often better to cut out the ditches on either side, and cart earth to the lower ground, thus making an oval shaped road in both places, improving its grade.

Frequently the gravelly, sandy soil of the hills, when mixed with the clay soil of the low land, and vice versa, is better than either alone for making roads. The subsoil usually makes a harder, better road than the loamy top soil; therefore it should be the aim to be taken to see that the ditches have a good free outlet for the accumulating water, drained from the road bed. Turnpiking is only complete after the ground has been nicely leveled, all stones picked up, and all but the wagon track sown with grass seed.

ANNIVERSARY SERMON.

A full congregation was present at the Presbyterian church last Sunday morning when the pastor, Rev. W. H. Babbitt gave his 6th annual sermon, reviewing the history and progress of the church during the 6th year of his ministry. The text of the discourse was announced to be 2d Thess. 1:11 12. "Wherefore also we pray always for you that our God would count you worthy of this calling and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness and the work of faith with power; that the name of the Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you and ye in him according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ."

After stating that these words expressed his desire for the people of his charge who had treated him ever with much kindness, the pastor went on to speak of the history of the church and congregation as a small part of the larger history of God's gracious dealings with men. He referred to the fact that in the congregation were some who took an active interest in the secular affairs of the church and were regular attendants on the services, who were not members of the church. He thanked them for the interest they took and hoped they would identify themselves fully with the organization. The gratuitous services of the choir received acknowledgment in the name of the congregation and the wish was expressed that more voices could be heard in the singing of the hymns. It was mentioned as a source of gratification that so many of the Sabbath school were present at church services and an appeal was made to bring the children at an early age to the place of worship. The attendance at the Sabbath school was stated to average 200 with 50 in the primary class. The formation of a Young People's Society for social and religious culture was referred to as an encouraging feature in the years history and the interest taken by the church in its young people was commended. The spiritual condition of the church as manifested in special services and in the amount of good work done was declared to be above the average of some other years. The additions to membership during the year were 18, six of them by certificate and 12 by confession of faith. The net gain, after deducting deaths and dismissions was eight. The full number of members was 235. The pastor stated that during the 6 years of his ministry he had married 50 couples, had officiated at 42 marriages and baptized 53, and preached 300 sermons and made a large number of calls. His parish extended in some directions 4 or 5 miles and in none less than 2 or 3. The advantage the church had been to those connected with it was alluded to and the liberality of the people in giving to objects of Christian benevolence was heartily commended.

In conclusion the necessity for greater faith and courage in the work assigned to the church was dwelt upon, and all were urged to redouble their efforts during the coming year, to trust in the divine promise of help, and to attempt great things for God and expect great things of God.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

As heretofore announced there will be a Union Memorial service at the Presbyterian church next Sabbath evening addressed by Rev. F. Adkins. To attend this in a body members of Beers' Post and Co. C., M. S. T. will assemble in their respective halls at 6:30 P. M. from whence they will march, so as to promptly reach the church at 7:30. The vacant Hewitt store room next west of Marks & Russell's, has been kindly tendered in which to receive and arrange the floral decorations. Our citizens are once more urged to assist in procuring and arranging the flowers for this ceremony. All who can help in this labor of love will please report at this room early Wednesday forenoon. Those who cannot give their time and can contribute flowers, will please send them to this place where they will be properly taken care of by Mrs. H. S. Lee and Will H. Hayden. In the afternoon at 1:30 the procession will be formed by Marshall J. R. Hindy and aids—Fred Rosacrans, J. H. Aten and D. F. Hall, as follows: Beers' Post on S. Pearl street, Co. C. on N. Pearl St., with other organizations and citizens in carriages on Chicago street West of Penn. The march will be down Chicago to Ottawa and up Ottawa to Maumee at square. Here at 2 o'clock the exercises will begin, in charge of President of the Day—Rev. Josiah Phelps.

Opening Prayer—Rev. J. H. Vincent.
Music.
Oration—Rev. T. G. Potter.
Music.
Closing Prayer—Rev. W. H. Babbitt.

At the conclusion of this service the march will be direct to the cemetery where the public ceremony of decorating the unknown graves of Union soldiers as prescribed in the G. A. R. ritual will be conducted by commander G. W. Marsden, assisted by Beers' Post. At the same time details from the Post and Co. C. will be placing flags and bouquets upon the graves of all known soldiers who rest in our cemetery.

A BASE BALL CLUB.

Tecumseh is to have a base ball nine sure. Matters have progressed so far that a sufficient number have agreed to join an association, and the details of organization will soon be perfected. The following persons have already signed; Jno. Freeman, Vincent Chapman, Chas. Keysor, Jehiel Davidson, J. L. Anderson, Ed. McKinney, Al. Heidenrich, Bert Conklin, Will Spayde, Sam McClure, M. Eckert, Rob Grimm, Will Ross.

These well known players guarantee a nine which will do credit to the town, and which, we predict will carry the pennant of Lenawee County for 1888. The members will hold a meeting to-morrow evening to perfect an organization etc. We hope the enterprise will receive the encouragement it deserves.

The Indian Summer Time.

A beautiful song and chorus, by Will L. Thompson, author of Gathering Shells on the Sea Shore, Come where the Lilies Bloom, etc. It is one of the prettiest songs ever published; any music dealer will mail it for 40 cents. Published by

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Ed. Snedicor went to Toledo Monday.

L. M. Pitman, of Detroit, was in town Tuesday.

Frank Hall has returned to his college duties at Lansing.

Mrs. Chas. Kiel and sister are visiting at Mrs. John Heck's.

Miss May Hunt, of Manchester, visited friends in town last week.

Mrs. Lydia Smith, of Adrian, visited Tecumseh friends last Saturday.

Mrs. Lucius Lilley and Mrs. L. P. Tribou went to Ann Arbor Monday.

Dr. Stewart's new house on Chicago street is being rapidly enclosed.

Mrs. Geo. S. Tiffany and Miss Julia Snell went to Ann Arbor last Thursday.

Miss Etta Conkling started Wednesday morning for a month's visit with friends in Chicago, Ill.

The C. J. & M. pay car disbursed money and happiness to the men employed here last Tuesday.

Ira Gray, of Eustis, Florida, arrived in town last Monday. He expects to spend the summer here.

J. W. Crane went to Minneapolis last Monday, where he expects to engage in the lumber business.

A. L. Brewer has been treating his house to a new coat of paint, which greatly improves its appearance.

Baker & Hall have the new summer drink, "milk shake" and they know how to put it up in good shape too.

Mrs. Wm. Grootenhuis was taken to the Kalamazoo insane asylum last Monday, her mind having become deranged.

Mrs. J. W. Brown, of Wilburn, Kan., returned to Tecumseh last Monday and will spend the summer with her daughter.

Al. Heesen's new bicycle arrived yesterday. It is a Columbia Light Roadster, of superior workmanship, and cost $140.

Station Agent Allen, of the C. J. & M. started with his family for a trip around the lakes last Saturday. They will take in Macinack and other resorts on the way.

Toledo men show good sense. One came here this week and selected a very fine buggy from C. A. Slayton's large stock because he could buy at a better price here than in Toledo. This speaks well for our dealers.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Monroe County, N. Y., has presented Mrs. Cleveland with an elegant Griffith Cob microscope and accessories in recognition of her temperance views. The microscope was made especially for this gift and is of the finest workmanship.

Sam Henry, of Tecumseh, has sold his horse, known as Prince Henry, to H. H. Ferguson, of Rome Center, for $1,000, provided the animal shows a full mile at Adrian, on June 5th, in 2:30, and is sound and all right. For every second he trots below 2:30, Mr. Henry is to have $100 extra, deducting $100 for every second of slower time.—Adrian Times.

The Township and Village Boards of Review will be in session at the Council room next Monday and Tuesday from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M. All persons who desire to view their assessments can then have an opportunity to do so.

Township Board—John D. Shull, Albert Waring, Jehiel Davidson.

Village Board—Jehiel Davidson, Horace Weller, G. W. Frazier, Albert Hyde, Fred B. Wood.

The Cincinnati, Jackson & Mackinaw railroad will run its first excursion to Devil's Lake, Mich., from Van Wert and Toledo and all intermediate stations, on Sunday, June 3d, at the rate of 40 cents from Tecumseh. Train will leave Tecumseh at 10.02, giving over five hours at one of the most delightful resorts in Michigan. Devil's Lake, with her commodious hotel accommodations, and ample facilities for boating and fishing, offers the greatest inducement to the sportsman and pleasure seeker. For further particulars see small bills.

H. R. JOHNSTON, Gen'l. Pass. Agt.
T. C. M. SCHINDLER, Ass't Gen'l Pass'r Agent.

Mrs. M. H. Saviers, of Hillsdale, has arrived in Tecumseh, and will canvass the village and township for the purpose of introducing her celebrated Vegetable Compound, which is acknowledged as a marvel in the science of medicine, and on its merits is recommended by the medical profession. Mrs. S. comes to Tecumseh bearing with her recommendations of the following well known gentlemen of Hillsdale: Capt. John L. Frisbie; George Kenny, ex-county treasurer; Horace Gamble, justice of the peace; L. A. Goodrich, druggist and chemist; Charles H. Smith, registered druggist and chemist; James Beaty, county treasurer, and others, and we heartily bespeak for her a kind patronage from our people when she presents herself to them.

Next Tuesday, May 29th, is circus day.

Go and see the festival of nations tomorrow evening.

Geo. Kies, of Elkhart, was in town the first of the week.

Geo. W. Stacy, of East Buffalo, was [illegible]

C. S. Whittier has taken a position in the office of the Tecumseh Mf'g. Co.

Misses Hattie Whittier and Lizzie Beamish are spending a few days in Adrian.

A shooting gallery has been opened in the building west of Herning's meat market.

John Heesen is repairing his little steamer and putting it in readiness to launch on the Globe pond.

There was a very large congregation at the Presbyterian church last Sunday morning to listen to Rev. Wm. H. Babbitt's anniversary sermon.

Mabley & Co., of Detroit, have the contract for furnishing Alger hats and dusters to all Alger clubs that intend going to the Chicago Convention.

After three week's vacation, Lyster H. Dewey, of Cambridge, returned on Monday to the Agricultural College to resume his studies in the Senior class.

Lucius Lilley received last week a box of fresh peaches from Frank Buman, raised on Frank's Florida plantation. The HERALD boys had a chance to sample a few of them.

Mrs. Fannie Stewart and Mrs. Mary C. Wood have gone as delegates to represent the Tecumseh W. C. T. U., at the state W. C. T. U. convention, meeting in Coldwater Mich., this week.

All ladies in need of a new spring hat—and what lady is not?—are invited to call at Mrs. M. A. Freeman's and examine her fine line of spring and summer millinery goods. She has the best assortment ever displayed in Tecumseh.

The city band gave their first open air concert last Saturday. A splendid program of about an hour's length was presented, and a large crowd gathered on the streets to enjoy the music. The season was very successfully opened.

A quartette, consisting of Chas. Bostedor, 2d tenor; Herman Halliday, 1st bass; Geo. Wilson, 2d bass, all of Clinton; and Chas. Keysor, 1st tenor, of Tecumseh; will furnish vocal music for the exercises here on Decoration Day.

The funeral of conductor Fred Avery was held at his residence in Adrian last Sunday afternoon, and was very largely attended. A special train went down the Jackson branch for the benefit of the masonic fraternity who wished to go. Sixteen masons went from Clinton and sixty from Tecumseh.

The Michigan Press Association will meet at Detroit next week, May 29, 30 and 31. An elaborate program of business and pleasure has been prepared, and the session will last three whole days. The HERALD will be represented on the occasion unless something goes wrong.

The Tecumseh W. C. T. U. will not convene this week on account of the absence of the President and Secretary and as they need the time to prepare for the festival of Nations held in the Opera House, on Friday evening, which is given by the Tecumseh churches, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U.

Candidates for county offices are beginning to show their hands. Among the latest arrivals is Dr. Nelson, of Ridgeway, who, we understand, is a candidate for Register. Ridgeway has never had a representative on the County ticket since F. J. Hough was elected sheriff and he was a Macon man. The Doctor is well qualified for the position and we believe he would make a good run.

The opening of the season at the Sand Lake House will occur this year on Friday, June 9th. Mr. Wells intends to make it a gala day, and he expects to entertain a large crowd. There will be two base ball games during the day. In the forenoon Evans Lake vs. Invincibles, to which admission will be free. In the afternoon the grounds will be leased to Clinton vs. Norvell. Row boats and sail boats to accommodate all. The festivities of the day will wind up with a grand ball in the evening.

Prof. D. A. Hammond will close his labors here at the end of the present year, having accepted the Superintendency of the Charlotte schools, at a salary of $1400. During his residence here Prof. Hammond has been very successful and has proven himself a worthy successor of Profs. Estabrook, Lawton, Thomas and Spencer. Tecumseh has graduated some of the best superintendents in the state. Estabrook went to the Normal, Lawton to Jackson, Thomas to East Saginaw, Spencer to Battle Creek, and now Hammond goes to Charlotte. Our entire community will deeply regret his departure. He is a gentleman in every sense of the word, a fine scholar, and a first-class school manager. A liberal advance in salary is Prof. Hammond's sole reason for making the change.

Jim Jones went to Detroit yesterday.

Walter Heck spent last Sunday at Adrian.

Mrs. G. E. Brownell is visiting friends in the village this week.

Two brick blocks will be erected in [illegible]

Misses Jennie Heck and Nellie Lawrence visited the county seat last Monday.

The Adrian City Council have fixed the saloon bonds at $3000, which is the minimum limit allowed by law.

Miss Louise Mettler, formerly of Adrian, has engaged with the Emma Abbott opera company for the coming season.

Sam'l McClure is raising the wing of his house another story which will add greatly to the appearance as well as capacity.

The Postoffice will be open Decoration Day, May 30, between the hours of 7:00 and 9:00 A. M. and 11:30 A. M. and 1:00 P. M.

Geo. Smith, of Toledo, is in town a day or two. He has sold his paper store, and will spend a few months settling up his affairs.

Michael Smeltzer is now the happy possessor of a fine music box, which will grind out almost any tune you can think of except "Sweet Violets". It is the result of a raffle at Arnold's restaurant.

E. A. Rankin, manager of the Tecumseh Mf'g. Co. reports business opening up brisk. The company will hereafter do a wholesale business exclusively, having sold their retail stock to Temple, McClure & Co.

Eugene Hodges has secured the appointment of Street Commissioner and entered upon his duties yesterday. If he performs his new duties as well as his predecessor, no one will have reason to complain, and we have no doubt he will.

We understand that Charles Keysor is intending to fix up a suite of bath rooms in connection with his tonsorial parlors. This is a good scheme and ought to pay well. Tecumseh has long needed something of that kind.

Dr. R. B. House and wife are spending this week with their numerous Tecumseh friends. The Doctor attended the Homoeopathic State Medical Society last week and upon his return concluded to enjoy a few days' sojourn at his old home.

The supervisors this spring, in addition to their usual assessments, are required to ascertain and report the names of every soldier living in their respective towns, with the company, regiment, battery or vessel in which they served. The act requiring this work at this time was passed at the last session of the legislature, number ed 286, and approved June 28 1887.

The Fourth annual reunion of the "Students of the Raisin Institute" will be held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. B. Colvin, Raisin, Thursday, June 7th, 1888, at 10 A. M. Picnic dinner. There will be conveyances at Sutton's Station, 4 miles south of Tecumseh, for all wishing to come on train. A. G. HALL, Sec.
P. O. Sutton, Mich.

The Young Peoples' Society of the Presbyterian church held a meeting last Friday evening and gave the best program yet presented by the Society. Mr. P. S. McKinnon read an original paper, recitations were given by Miss Hosmer, Julia Wood and others, while the music was well sustained by Prof. Ahren, Mr. W. C. Sharp, Mr. Hillman, and Miss Jennie Root. At the close of the literary exercises a new election of officers was held with the following result.

President—Dr. W. A. Frost.
Vice Pres.—Miss May Woodard.
Secretary—Bert Waring.
Treasurer—Miss Anna Hialey.

Several communications were read from different factory owners who contemplate making a change of location, at the meeting of the B. M. A. last evening. The electric light project was also brought before the meeting, but received little encouragement, as it was the sentiment of those present that it would be more to the advantage of the village to secure some manufacturing enterprises first and then talk of the light. Offers from several companies have been received using different kinds of light. The meeting adjourned without taking any action on the matter, to the regular monthly meeting, when the charter is expected to be here.

If on or before the 12th day of June, a week before the meeting of the republican national convention, it shall appear that James G. Blaine cannot control enough votes to be nominated by that convention, a letter from him will be forthcoming, positively declaring to be a candidate. But if votes enough, in spite of the Florence letter and other outgivings of the same nature, can be secured to nominate him, then he will be the nominee. This the Times gets from authority closer to Mr. Blaine than any of the interviews that have been given to the press.

Blaine will be nominated.

This is taken from the Adrian Times of yesterday. There has been no doubt, at any time during the past six months, of Mr Blaine's nomination, provided of course that he shall be alive and in good health when the Chicago convention meets.

Regular meeting of the Prohibition club at K. of L. Hall, Monday, May 28, at 7:30 o'clock. Let all turn out.
BY ORDER OF COM.

Rev. J. M. Getchell left town for Minnesota last Monday, to visit his mother and other friends in that state. [illegible]

Franklin will have appropriate services Decoration day. The address will be delivered in the afternoon by W. Stearns, of Adrian.

The orange festival given last Thursday evening by the Girl's Aid Society of St. Peters' church, was something new in the line of church suppers. Oranges were served in almost every conceivable shape, and ice cream was on the menu of course. For three hours the tables were constantly filled with guests coming and going. The financial results fully repaid the young ladies for their trouble.

A BIG OFFER.

The HERALD does not intend to be outdone in enterprise, even by the Detroit dailies. After much reflection and patient consideration we have decided to offer a prize to the person who shall guess the three hottest days, politically, in Lenawee County, between June 1st and election day, guaged by the political thermometer in the HERALD office. The prize will consist of a years subscription to the HERALD and a lithograph portrait of the man who shall be elected President next fall. The first person who makes the right guess or approximates nearest to it will be entitled to the prize, and all guesses must be handed in before July 1st., next. Send dates on a postal card in this form:

Monday, August 6.
Saturday, October 6
Thursday, October 25.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

Mrs. J. K. Boies of Hudson, has been critically ill for some days, and her recovery is very doubtful.

There was a meeting of millers at at Hillsdale last week. Tecumseh was represented by Wm. Hayden and Heck Bros.

Conductor Fred Avery of Adrian was an employe of the Lake Shore road for forty years, most of that time filling the position of conductor.

Some of the piles driven at the sink hole on the Mackinaw measure 150 feet. The expense of constructing the railroad over the hole will be thousands of dollars.—Hudson Post.

A carload of 23 tons of paper was shipped from the paper mill, Tuesday, to Buffalo, N. Y. In hauling to depot one wagon load contained 1161 lbs. drawn by the team of Alf. Hutchins—said to be the largest load of paper ever hauled from the mill.—Dundee Reporter.

Both the American and the United States express companies will carry free of charge all flowers brought to trains on Tuesday, May 29, and destined for the work of decorating the soldiers' monument at Detroit on Memorial day. These two companies cover the state, so that no one who desires to send flowers need have any trouble in finding a way.

Two valuable colts belonging to Coleman Young, who lives in the central part of Seneca, escaped from a pasture field Sunday night and wandered to North Morenci. There they happened to be standing on the railroad track as the fast express came along and one of them was instantly killed, the other being considerably bruised, but will recover. Mr. Young estimates his loss by this accident at $150.—Morenci Observer.

Messrs. W. H. Hayden, L. Stewart and Gus. Cummins, of the Tecumseh Bicycle Club, came here yesterday morning on their wheels and returned on the 6:50 passenger train. The boys came around by the Bridgewater town hall and as there was a cold west wind blowing they experienced considerable difficulty in making fast time. Our boys, who gathered around them at the depot, thought that they had considerable pluck to start out on such a jaunt before breakfast.—Manchester Enterprise.

Workmen, in sinking a well on Chas. Lewis' lot on Jackson street, found several pieces of bright copper clippings or shavings, which looked as though the drill has passed into a chunk of solid copper. The drill was down about 60 feet, and the pieces exhibited on the streets excited considerable comment and some excitement, but we could not learn that the price of the lot advanced any or that any offers were made for it. If some practical joker is not at the bottom of it—not the well, though some who are taken in may wish he was—we shall lose our guess.—Manchester Enterprise.

—ATTENTION. Do you know that slate roofs are cheaper than shingles? Before covering your roofs, old or new, consult Corwell & Williams, Ridgeway, Mich. Twenty years experience in manufacturing and laying enables them to give you a first class roof at lowest figures.

An entertainment is to be given in the Opera House, Friday, May 25th. Five nations will be represented in costumes. Supper will be served from 5 to 8. Ticket to hall and supper 25cts. Ice cream extra. Tickets to hall 10cts. Proceeds to aid the W. C. T. U.

their Temperance work. As this is the first time they have called upon you for aid it is hoped the friends of temperance will respond and give them a rousing benefit.

COMMITTEES.

Chairmen for churches—Mrs. M. E. Corey, Mrs. N. M. Sutton.

Chairman for W. C. T. U.—Mrs. A. P. Coddington.

The Winter Circus.—A good winter circus, at moderate rates of admission, has been opened in the American Institute Building under the direction of Mr. Frank A. Robbins. Combined with it is an interesting menagerie. There are two rings and an elevated stage, serving for the exhibition of a variety of clever feats by male and female performers. Among the equestrians is Charles Fish, the noted bareback rider; rifle shooting and club swinging, each by a young woman; acts on the trapeze, fencing, juggling, displays of acrobatic skill, and the tricks of trained animals are included in the programme of entertainment. The interior of the building has been arranged so that it is well adapted to its present uses, and it will doubtless be visited by crowds of old and young.—The Evening Post, Dec. 27, 1887.

LEGEND OF A MISSOURI CAVE.

Disappearance of a Brave Hunter—Remains Found after Many Years.

A writer in the St. Louis Republican says that on the dividing ridge separating the waters of the Meramec from the Missouri in Franklin county is a cave [illegible] ly remarkable from a tragic event which [illegible]

The mouth of the cave is funnel shaped, and about eighteen feet deep. A horizontal passage leads off in a southwest direction to a distance of two hundred and sixty feet, when an enlarged chamber suddenly terminates in an abrupt chasm or unknown depth.

Early in the present century a hunter from St. Louis, named Labadie, connected with the families of that name identified with the history of this city, went out to Franklin County, then mostly a wilderness, in pursuit of game. He had his son, a small lad, with him.

They got on the trail of a bear, which they followed until the animal took refuge in the cave. Nothing daunted, Mr. Labadie followed the bear into its hiding place and never came out alive. The boy heard the report of a gun and then all was silent.

He watched and waited at the mouth of the cave for his father's return, but he came not back. The boy remained near the cave all day and night, and then gave up his father for lost. With his hatchet he "blazed" the trees around the spot, in order to identify the place, and then returned home.

Whether search was made or not is not known, but the hunter, it is certain, was given up for lost, and his remains were allowed to rest in the rock-bound tomb.

Time rolled on, and about twenty years ago, when the engineers were laying out the track of the Pacific Railroad, which passed the cave, they had the curiosity to enter and explore its secrets. They found the bones of a bear and a skeleton of a human being lying close together. Not only this, but they also found an old musket barrel, half eaten by the rust, and a small quantity of old French and Spanish coin.

All these circumstances pointed to the old hunter Labadie as the person whose skeleton was thus revealed to the gaze of the explorers, and whose tragic history was preserved by tradition. The trees were also examined, and the old scars caused by the hatchet of the young Labadie were distinctly traced.

"Labadie Creek" and "Labadie Station" preserve the name of the daring hunter who lost his life in the vicinity.

CONVENIENCES FOR SMALL HOUSES.

Valuable Hints for the Housewife Who Has To Husband Space.

In small houses, where closets are not abundant, many convenient receptacles for certain things can be made to answer other purposes as well.

An ottoman, for instance, tall enough to serve for a seat, may have a top provided with hinges which on being raised discloses a partitioned box for hats and bonnets.

A long window seat made from a pine box and covered with figured jute, makes an admirable place to lay away clean sheets and spreads, and one as long and only half as wide is a great convenience in a dining room for the table cloths and napkins in use for the day.

Hanging shelves such as are used for books, when furnished with curtains, may be appropriated to carpets, trimmers and other equipments.

A feather duster might be copied to hang upon a support when there was a certainty that there was an appointed place where they would be found when wanted.

A slipper support is a difficult thing to make. The perfect orders are made like a Turkish slipper, that is, with a vamp, but no soles. The slipper is cut in pasteboard and covered with closely quilted satin. The top, which means the pocket for the slippers, is lined with thick linen of the same color, if possible, as the satin. The slipper is hung to the wall by the heel, at the back of which a loop should be made for the purpose.—Woman's Work.

MARRIAGE BY CAPTURE.

The Etiquette of Matrimonial Relationship among Savage Tribes.

Among savage tribes some very strange rules of etiquette appear to govern the matrimonial relationship.

Convention prevents a Yoruba wife from either speaking to, or even seeing her husband, if it can be avoided, and the rude Aleutian islanders have the same regulation about speaking.

In parts of the Fiji Islands a husband and wife, if they wish to meet, must meet in secret; a similar secrecy is or was obligatory among the Circassians, and even among the Hottentots. But the African kingdom of Fatu bears off the palm in these respects, if an old traveler is to be credited, who assures us that wives there were so bashful as never to let their husbands see them without a veil for three years after their marriage.

Among the Esquimaux, even in cases where the course of true love ran its smoothest, and accorded fully with parental settlements, certain old women had to be sent to drag the bride forcibly to her husband's hut, she being obliged under the penalty of an ill name to "make as if it went against the grain and as if she were much ruffled at it."

A Kamschadal girl (and the people of Kamschatka are among the rudest of the earth), however well disposed she may be to her future spouse, makes it a point of honor to pretend to refuse him, and the form of force on his side and of resistance on hers has in any case to be regularly performed.

And the wild tribe, the Hos of India, regard it as the correct thing for the wife to run away from her husband and to tell her friends that she neither loves him nor will ever see him again, while he in his turn is expected to display great anxiety for his loss, and when he has found his wife after diligent search to carry her home again by main force.

The Charm of Music.

Fair visitor (to convict)—"I suppose, sir, that the singing of the birds relieves the monotony of your dreary life?"

Convict (profoundly nonplussed)—"The singing of the birds, miss?"

Fair visitor—"Yes, sir, the little jail birds, you know. They must be such a boon."—New York Sun.

Why Dr. Schlieman Chose His Wife.

It is said that Mrs. Dr. Schlieman won her husband's heart by her knowledge of Greek. He visited at her father's house when she was a young woman of 18, and she amazed and delighted him by reciting to him a long extract from the Iliad. The next day he popped the question.

TALLEST TOWER IN THE WORLD.

Paris Will Build It and Have It Ready for the Exposition of 1889.

The plans for erecting an iron tower 975 feet in height and weighing 7,000 tons, to be completed for the Universal Exposition to be held in Paris France in 1889 have been adopted by the Commissioners of Public Works of that city. Several plans were submitted for inspection, but that of M. G. Eiffel, an engineer of Levillois-Perret (Department of the Seine) was the one which met with favor, and was accepted.

The tower will be made entirely of iron, and is formed of four columns, each 325 feet apart at the base, inclining toward each other and meeting at the height of 836 feet and 8 inches, thence forming one column to the summit.

One hundred and seventy-two feet from the ground there will be a landing in which will be restaurants, cafes, etc. Four elevators will take passengers from the ground to the second story, a distance of about 344 feet.

From that point up there will be only two elevators. The summit may be reached by elevator in six minutes. Stairs will also be placed in the columns leading to the first story for those who desire to climb to it.

The four columns will require sixteen foundations of iron, weighing not less than ten tons each, and will endure a wind pressure of about 800 pounds to the square yard.

The tower is expected to act the part of a huge lightning rod during thunderstorms, but precautions will be taken that no accidents occur from this fact to any one who may be in it during a storm.

From the summit of the tower a panoramic view of about seven hundred and twenty miles will be had.

The following shows how the tower will compare in height with other high towers and monuments:

The Washington Monument is 568 feet; Cathedral of Cologne, 516 feet; Cathedral of Rouen, 488 feet; Great Pyramid of Egypt, 474 feet; Cathedral of Strasburg, 461 feet; Cathedral of Vienna, 448 feet; St. Peter's, at Rome, 428 feet; Tower of the Invalides, Paris, 332 feet; Pantheon, Paris, 258 feet, and the Tower of Notre Dame, Paris, 214 feet.

The Washington Monument in this country, at present the highest in the world, will, when the tower is completed, be hardly more than one-half as high as the French undertaking.

MAKING HORSESHOE NAILS.

Something about the Manner These Articles Are Prepared for the Market.

The great bulk of horseshoe nails that are used throughout the United States, are principally made in Cleveland, Ohio, although some few come from Rhode Island.

Horseshoe nails are now made by machinery entirely. They are hammered hot from head to point by a succession of blows similar to those made by hand. The machines are capable of turning out 500 pounds per day, and any pattern which may be required can be shaped.

The nailer can take Swedish iron rods from a small portable furnace and thrust them two at a time into the machine, which runs at 1,000 revolutions a minute, and quickly shows them dropping out in blanks, properly heat and shaped in a style surpassing any hand made horseshoe nails ever manufactured. From the forging machine the blanks are taken, when cold, to the finishing machine, which draws the blank out, compresses it and points the nail ready to drive.

The nails when finished are packed nearly in boxes containing from 500 to 5,000, and are usually sold to the farrier at 6 cents per pound of 100 nails.

The invention of such new labor saving devices are in striking contrast to the time when horseshoe nails were forged by hand and straightened by the farrier before being fit for use. In those days the nails used to bring about 15 cents a piece.

Is Consumption Incurable?

The Morenci Observer makes a lively kick against the new mail service on the Fayette branch.

There is no denying the fact that Dr. Jones Red Clover Tonic is the most successful blood purifier ever put on the market. Its wonderful cures in all stomach, kidney and liver troubles has brought out many imitations. It restores debilitated nerve tissues, restoring the force lost by sickness, mental work or excessive use of liquor, opium and tobacco. Dr. Geo. Furguson, will supply the genuine at 50 cents a bottle.

GIRLS AND MOTHERS! READ THIS!

I wish to tell you of the case of a girl 16 years old, who had been sick with suppression two years. Her father had paid over $300 for doctor's bills, still she was failing. She had the worst countenance that I have ever seen, a kind of greenish yellow she was emaciated had constant bowel trouble, and had to take morphine every night in order to sleep at all. All who saw her thought she would die. Her parents said they had done all they could. I repeatedly urged them to try Zoa-Phora, but they were strongly prejudiced against "nostrums." Finally the mother said, "We must do something, and this is as likely to help her as anything." She and I persuaded the father to let the girl try it. As a result, in four months her functions were established and regular, and in six months she was the picture of health—a living wonder to all who had known her.

I could describe 20 other cases, not as wonderful as this, but still very remarkable cures.

WHEREAS, on the 11th day of October, 1883, Samuel W. Temple mortgaged to Addison Hardenburg, all that parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, in the county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point in the east line of Pearl street ten (10) rods south of the north line of Shawnee street, running thence eastwardly parallel with and ten (10) rods distant from [illegible] ten (10) rods to the Railway Depot Grounds; thence northward on west line of said Depot Grounds [illegible] land, or at least occupied by them as a Hog Ringer Factory; thence west on south line of said land of Beesep Brothers and Nyland two (2) rods more or less to land conveyed by said Samuel W. Temple and wife, Hettie A. to Edwin Wood; thence south on east line of said land so as aforesaid conveyed to said Wood two and one-half (2½) rods to the southeast corner thereof; thence west on south line of said parcel of land so as aforesaid conveyed to said Wood eight (8) rods to the east line of Pearl street aforesaid; thence south on east line of said Pearl street to place of beginning, with all the appurtenances thereto belonging or in anywise appertaining or thereupon situated, including the machinery in and about the buildings thereon or to be hereafter annexed to the same or any part thereof, to secure the payment of $2583.00 in five years from the date thereof with interest to be paid annually at the rate of ten per cent. per annum for the first three years, and for the remaining two years interest to be paid annually at the rate of nine per cent. per annum, which mortgage was, on the 11th day of October, 1883, duly recorded in office of Register of Deeds for said county of Lenawee in Liber 93 of mortgages on page 339 and 340. And whereas said mortgage contains a provision that in event any default shall be made in the payment of said interest, or any part thereof at the time therein specified, and shall remain in arrears for the space of sixty days the aforesaid principal sum with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of said mortgagee, his executors, administrators and assigns, become due and payable. And whereas default has been made in the payment of interest on said mortgage to the amount of $510 60-100 and upwards and the same having remained unpaid and in arrears for a space of more than sixty days, and the undersigned, administratrix, hereby elects to declare and does hereby declare the whole amount due, both principal and interest, amounting at the date of this notice to the sum of $3180.82 100, and no proceedings having been commenced at law or in equity for the recovery of said sum, or any part thereof. And whereas the undersigned administratrix has been compelled to pay the further sum of $98.37-100 for insurance premiums to protect her interest as such administratrix in the mortgaged premises.

Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and by virtue of the statutes of the State of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the moneys so due and owing on said mortgage, and the interest thereon from and after the date of this notice, said insurance premiums and interest thereon, as provided in said mortgage, and the cost and expense of this foreclosure, and the attorney fee provided by law; the said above described lands and premises will be sold at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of the Court House in the city of Adrian in said county of Lenawee (that being the place where the circuit court for said county of Lenawee is holden) on Saturday, the 26th day of May, A.D. 1888, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON FOR MAY 27th, 1888.

PETER'S DENIAL.—MATT. XXVI, 69-75.

This was a quadrangular interior court, about which the palace was built, very much like the court within the Hotel Continentale in Paris. From this court Peter could look directly into the room where Jesus was, see what was passing there. The porch was the passage-way from the court through the palace to the street. It was to this passage that Peter withdrew, after his first denial, to escape observation.——"A maid."—A female slave or dependent.——"The man."—What a cold reference to his Master. Contrast Matt. xvi, 16!——"Thy speech betrayeth thee.—It was a coarse, provincial method of speaking, easily recognizable. They were especially unable to distinguish the gutterals properly.——"Then began he to curse and swear."—Now he lost complete control of himself. Before he simply took an oath. Now imprecations follow hot upon each other and upon himself.—"He went out."—From this porch where he had denied his Lord twice. He went forth to be alone and weep.

INSTRUCTION.—Jesus' prediction of the denial of Peter has prepared us for the act; but we are startled into the sense of guilty participation when the denial comes with its indifference and impetuosity. With Peter we too often sit in court without and shift with the varying wind of popular sentiment.

On occasion of his comparing Peter's act with that of Judas. Judas had planned and deliberated. His was vicious in conception and deliberate in execution, while Peter's weakness was to a great degree temperamental. Unprepared and careless of the emergency, he fell an easy prey to an adverse influence. His heart was neither depraved nor untrue. Judas went out and in despair committed suicide. Peter melted from contrition and sorrow. He went forth in the dark alone but soon he met the glory of the rising sun. Henceforth his strength was to do and bear till the awful end.

Many of us like Peter fail because we are either ignorant or careless of our characteristic frailities. It may be over-confidence and boastfulness, or on the other hand, a shrinking from responsibility or a lack of responsibility or a lack of faith. We mean well, want to be true to our Master, but each has a weakness that may cause our ruin. We have purpose but not enough intelligent direction. The same road leads backward as well as forward. Find out and conquer these imperfections of character and manner—and let the hand of God guide steadily forward till his will in your life be done.

Peter himself paved the way to his own break down. In previous lessons we have found him boasting and self-confident; we have found him asleep, then fighting; soon he follows afar off, and now he has fallen into bad company, sitting at the fire with the enemies of his Master. Though his was a silent presence in the court-yard, yet he had put himself into a false position. His wavering soul and shivering body were not equal to the heroic task of acknowledgment. His many faults, not particularly immoral in themselves, begot the natural consequence, a wicked, dishonest act.

His was a total rout all along the line. There was no rallying, only complete discomfiture. No one need think that he must follow out this line of conduct, finally to obtain to Peter's penitence. Only a mighty nature could recover itself when Peter did. Most of us could not have had the grace to repent after a tripple denial. Now is the time for recovery after the first misstep. Do not be discouraged then. That may not be necessarily fatal. A simple acknowledgement, a rectifying one's false position, a change of direction and all would have been well with Peter and will be with us when we are not ashamed to confront a careless acquaintance with the truth.

Peter's sin was heinous in the extreme. He had professed more, so he sinned more foully. He lied repeatedly with oaths and cursing. It was about as bad a fall as he could have well made, considering his previous intimate relations with the One he denied. His was a progressive, a cumulative sin. Where would it have ended had not the cock freed him from the enchantment of the evil power. Then he remembered Christ's word. To each Christ speaks. To each the warning comes. Heed voice and warning.

It is well for our encouragement that this lesson is part of the Bible. No sin of itself need finally determine the moral condition of the sinful one. Whenever tears well-nigh break from shame and sorrow, then redemption is near at hand. So take courage! Few have a more sudden fall than Peter. All through Christ's love can recover themselves, and receive from him holiness and sweetness in abundance, purity and truth that alone secure salvation.

TEMPERANCE COLUMN.

Edited by a Committee of the W. C. T. U

THE SALOON IN POLITICS

The [illegible] tions of the country have been endeavoring for some time to secure the appointment, by Congress, of a commission to inquire into and report upon the effects of the liquor traffic. During the last session, a bill providing for such a commission passed the Senate; that being the sixth time the upper chamber had testified its willingness to make the investigation. The annual report of the National Temperance Society relates succinctly the further fortune of the measure: "In the House of Representatives the Senate bill has been reported adversely, with a minority report in its favor by the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic. It is not probable that the bill will pass the present House." When it is remembered that the public conscience is at present manifesting unprecedented sensitiveness on the temperance question, and that the gravity and extent of the drink evil are recognized more generally to day than ever before, the apparent apathy of the popular branch of the national legislature is the more striking. It is possibly true that the commission asked for would, if appointed, effect little. But the mischief done by drink is so palpable, the waste of capital upon it is so enormous, its action as a generator of crime is so direct and potent, its agency as an obstacle to progress and a check to civilization is so positive and undeniable, that it does not seem easy for an ostensibly representative body to make any valid defense of its refusal to inquire formally into a subject of such importance and scope.

But it is not Congress alone that in this matter appears to be in opposition to a strong and constantly growing popular sentiment. In two states, New York and New Jersey, the Legislatures have recently refused to give the people the opportunity to vote upon the temperance question. In neither of these cases have the politicians who took this course any explanation to offer which can be regarded as justifying their action.

WHY POLITICIANS DO NOT OPPOSE THE SALOON.

How is it, then, that while, in the absence of absorbing political issues, the great question is attracting more and more attention among the people, the politicians of both the old parties seem to close their ears, shut their eyes, and turn their backs with increasing obstinacy to all demands and solicitations on behalf of temperance? The answer to this question is not hard to find. It is that party politics in the United States to-day are controlled by the saloon, and that when action against the drink-evil is proposed politicians revolt as from a parricidal proposition. For many years the political corruption of American cities has been a source of perplexity to reformers. All kinds of schemes for amending and purifying municipal government have been devised, but none of them have proved successful. Changes of party control have simply substituted hungry spoilsmen for gorged ones. There have been now and then flashes of improvement, but they have passed quickly, and the old knavery, plunder, and bad government have returned. In vain have citizens' parties, independent parties, all manner of new experiments, been tried. Against every effort at reform the discipline and power of the saloon have prevailed, and have restored the old conditions. Long ago the saloons abolished party politics in our largest cities. To day, in every such city, the local government is vested in neither party, but is in the hands of the saloon itself. Nominally, the government may be democratic or republican. Actually, it is in commission by a band of venal politicians, who have no convictions or principles, who trade and "swap" opportunities for plunder, with one another, who act as agents for the so-called party leaders, but who acknowledge allegiance only to the saloon.

THE DELUSION OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE.

A government "of the people, by the people, and for the people," is the ideal of democracy; but the American people assuredly do not enjoy it at present, whatever they may do in the future. The delusion that the suffrage as now exercised enables any citizen to express his own opinions is perhaps less widely diffused than formerly, but even yet it interferes with a just comprehension of the hold the saloon has obtained upon our politics. In order to make the situation intelligible a few figures are here necessary. There are, in round numbers, 185,000 saloons in the country. These places and the 8,000 wholesale liquor stores together absorb every year revenues estimated at from seven to nine hundred million dollars. It is in the cities that the saloon is most powerful. Now, the ten largest cities in the Union—namely, New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Chicago, Boston, St. Louis, Baltimore, Cincinnati, San Francisco, and New Orleans—contain nearly one-tenth of the entire population of the country, while fifty other cities, of 30,000 and over, contain another tenth; so that sixty cities comprise one-fifth of the whole population. It is in [illegible] strongly intrenched, and it is here that it exercises that mastery in politics which renders it so formidable and so mischievous.

THE TEST SHE PROPOSED.

Imposing a Hard Condition on an Importunate Lover.

"Yes, darling," he said in tones of deep tenderness, "I would do anything to show my love for you."

"Ah!" sighed the gentle maiden, "that's what all men say when they are striving to win a woman's heart."

"Put me to the proof," he exclaimed, in wild, passionate tones, "put me to the proof, test me and see if I fail. Set me any task within the bounds of possibility and it shall be performed."

"Ah!" she murmured, "if I could only believe you!"

"Put me to the test. Say to me, do this or do that, and it shall be done."

"Then I will put you to the test."

"Ah," he exclaimed, exultingly, "you shall see the height, the depth, the length, the breadth, the circumference of my love!—What is the test?"

The maiden dropped her snowy lids until the silken lashes rested on the peach bloom of her cheek, a slight smile dimpled the corners of her mouth, and bending over the youth who knelt at her feet she whispered:

"Marry some other girl!"—Boston Courier.

The Best Broom.

The best broom is of light green color, which indicates that the material is of the best flexibility and toughness. The cheap broom corn is of a sickly yellow or lemon color. Manufacturers who use only the green splints assert that the manufacturers of the yellow splints give them a green bath, and that the coloring matter has paris green in it, so that when the housewife takes a splint to try her cake she may be putting a deadly poison in it. The men who make this dye, however, say that it is a harmless vegetable compound.—Good Housekeeping.

Poor Teaching.

Uncle Clinton, who is a power among the people on the plantation, is dissatisfied with the colored school teacher.

Upon my asking him the reason of his dissatisfaction, he said:

"La! bless you, miss, dis teacher 's a no-account teacher, nohow. My Grant he went to de las' teacher we had three weeks ago, and got a very good edgercation. But my Sis and Tip have been to dis one two days and dey ain't l'arned deir letters."

Book Writers Beware.

The man who writes an immoral but immortal book may be tracked into eternity by a procession of lost souls from every generation, every one to be a witness against him at the Judgment, to show to him and the universe the immeasurable dreadfulness of his iniquity. —Hartford Religious Herald.

I think Ely's Cream Balm is the best remedy for catarrh I ever saw. I never took anything that relieved me so quickly, and I have not felt so well for a long time. I used to be troubled with severe headache two or three times a week, but since using the Balm have only had one and that was very light compared with other former ones. J. A. Alcorn, Ag't U. P. R. R. Co. Eaton, Colo.

I find Ely's Cream Balm good for catarrh of long standing.—M. N. Nasley, 1934 West Chesnut St., Louisville, Ky.

Cure of Cancer and Ulcers.

Judge T. C. McLondon writes to the Swift Specific Co.: "About three years ago, Jerry Bradley had a cancerous sore on his face, near the right eye. It caused him a great deal of pain, and he lost the sight of the eye, but was finally cured by the use of Swift's Specific. This case is well known in Wilkes Co., Ga., where he lives."

Mr. L. Cox, of Arkabutla, Tate Co., Miss., writes: "I suffered a great deal from old ulcers for years. Your medicine was recommended, and after using six bottles I was completely cured. Your medicine does even more than you claim for it. I have known it to cure cases which were thought hopeless."

Mrs. A. M. Goldsmith, No. 674 Warren St., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "I commenced using S. S. S. about three years ago. I had suffered from a sore throat for over a year. I used a great many other remedies with no good results. My little girl also, had sore fingers; it commenced from the quick, and then the nails would come off. We doctored her for over two years, and when I commenced using S. S. S. I thought I would see what it would do for her. I am thankful to say that it entirely cured her. It is the best remedy I know of for the blood. I really believe it was the means of saving my life. The doctor told me I had a throat disease similar to Gen. Grant's. I cheerfully recommend it to all suffering from disordered blood."

Learned Professors Say.

The most serious diseases of the heart, says Prof. Da Costa, may occur without any symptoms. Prof. Trousseau, of Paris, states that death from heart disease is usually caused by congestion of the lungs, liver, stomach or kidneys, from imperfect circulation of the blood. Dr. Miles' New Cure for the Heart is the latest and most reliable remedy for this little understood but grave disease. It has cured thousands of cases. Don't fail to try it. Ask for testimonials, sold at Baker and Hall's Drug Store.

ESTATE OF JOHN NIBLACK.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss

At a session of the Probate Court, for the county of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, on Wednesday, the 16th day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

Present Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of John Niblack, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Edwin Howell, administrator upon said estate, alleging among other things that the funeral expenses of said deceased and the expenses of administration thus far incurred have been fully paid, that said estate is insolvent and praying for the allowance of his final account and that a dividend of the residue of said estate remaining in his hands may be made under the order of this court among the creditors of said deceased, and that he may be discharged and his bond cancelled, and for such other order and decree as to this court shall seem proper.

It is ordered, That Monday, the 18th day of June next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the City of Adrian, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of said Petitioners should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said Petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee for three successive weeks, previous to said day of hearing.

NORMAN GEDDES, Judge of Probate.

The ladies of the Episcopal social will hold their next social at the residence of R. M. Johnson, May 31st.

Mrs. Nancy Morse of Allegan county, is visiting at her sister's, Mrs. Moses Butterfield.

C. W. Greenleaf will build his son Verne a house in the village soon, as we have been informed.

Rumor says that the house of Geo. Baker of Gratiot county, with its contents were lately destroyed by fire. Mr. B. formerly lived in this locality.

The straw balers that have been working here for a few weeks left a while ago. They shipped 60 car loads of baled straw from this place consequently must have left a little change among the farmers in this locality, and I would now advise them that if they do not take the HERALD they had better take a little straw money and subscribe at once and support a good temperance paper.

Mr. Local Option, commenced business here and carried it on for a few days, then sold out to Hi License, an that party will continue business for a while.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Aldrich have lately received a letter from Oswego county, N. Y., stating that the house that Mr. Aldrich built, and in which they first commenced house-keeping directly after marriage, was burned down recently. The house was built 58 years ago and was in a good state of preservation, being built of large timbers such as they built frame houses in those days. Thus their thoughts were turned back to the time when they first started down life's broad road together, over half a century ago.

A mission band concert was held at the North Rome church last Sunday evening.

A daughter of Jacob Johnson entertained her juvenile friends on Saturday last, it being her birthday.

FRANKLIN FACTS.

James Eddy went to Pennsylvania last Friday expecting to remain a few days.

Benj. Lamkin, who spent a week or ten days in Tennessee last March, was delighted with the country. He left Michigan in very poor health and experienced a decided improvement immediately upon his arrival there. Although much benefited by the trip he is still in poor health.

While assisting to build a dam for the washing of sheep, one day last week, B. Hurry cut his big toe badly.

James Allen is quite poorly, having an attack of his old enemy, asthma and catarrh.

Clarence Wisner has rose cold.

Saturday evening May 26th the Union Literary and Lyceum met at A. D. Hunt's hospitable home. This time of year is such a busy time on the farm that it is not at all strange that many had been unable to find the time to prepare the exercise appointed them. Several recitations and songs, instrumental music by Messrs. Taylor and McCollum, and a full query box occupied the evening. Mrs. L. E. Taylor who was on the program for an original poem, was unable to attend. The next regular meeting will be held at L. E. Taylor's the last Saturday night in June.

Has Oliver Orton sailed up to the moon in his new faugled baloon?

Frederick Deming of Grand Rapids paid his mother and other relatives a flying visit last week.

A correspondent at Caro, says: "You must have a new kind of measles down in Franklin." Oh! blessed spot where German measles are not known; would I could fly to thee Tuscola county. For her benefit I will say that the German measles has been wandering around here "seeking whom he may devour" for the past six or eight years to my certain knowledge, and how much longer I am not prepared to say. Of course he is not constantly in one locality but comes at irregular intervals; he spares neither age, sex or condition of life, and no "previous condition of servitude to any other measles will be of any use to you in escaping him; for no matter how many times you have had the other kind you can always have the German. They usually assume a comparatively mild form but are sometimes severe, and have in a few cases, not in Franklin, proved fatal.

MACON MUSIC.

Sumner Collins of Detroit, Sundayed with Edwin Howell.

Mr. Betser and wife of Hillsdale visited his brother Wes., this week.

Spencer Morgan is spending a few weeks with his uncle, David Camburn at Springport.

Eugene Burdette has improved the appearance of his residence with a fresh coat of paint.

The ladies aid society of the Reformed church met at Mrs. William Morgan's last Wednesday afternoon; quite a number in attendance.

Dr. Elmer Hendershot has opened an office at the 'Dew Drop.' He comes well recommended and we bespeak for him a liberal patronage from the people.

NORTHERN LENAWEE FARMERS' CLUB.

The ladies of the Northern Lenawee Farmers' club, met with Mrs. L. Mangus on Wednesday afternoon, May 16, Mrs. O. P. Remington presiding. There was a good attendance and an interesting program being prepared, the literary exercises deserve special mention. The question was, "Which is the most economical for a farmer's wife to use, rag or sale carpeting?

The opening speaker advanced arguments against the making of rag carpets, by farmer's wives, her reason being, the extreme low price of sale carpeting compared to the actual cost of an average rag carpet. Few who make, can tell what the cash cost per yard is. Also that it is a mistake to think they get more service from a rag than a good ingrain carpet. Last but not least, the spare moments of a farmer's wife, from her multiplied cares and duties should be better employed in the improvement of both mind and body of herself and family.

Others thought there was more service in rag carpet for a much used room, and that the expense of making carpet was not felt as it was so divided up into littles, as when it came in one large amount.

Much freedom was used in interchange of thought, ways, methods and plans, pertaining to the farmers wife's work. All seemed well pleased with the success of the afternoon meetings, and motion was made and carried to hold one once a month during the summer.

The next meeting will be held at Mrs. J. F. N. Bowen's, on Wednesday afternoon, June 13. An invitation is extended to members of adjoining clubs. All are cordially invited.

The following is the program for the next meeting.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, MAY 31.

Uncle Sam ought to take a lesson from Michigan by paying his debts, raising only money he needs for actual expenses, and making taxes so direct that congress will not dare to get a surplus into the treasury.

One hundred thousand men are revolting against the trust and tariff combinations in the coal regions of Pennsylvania. It is pretty evident that even in that benighted region of monopoly, intolerance and apprehension, laboring men are finding out where the shoe pinches and where the remedy lies.

The Republican party has always favored the rich. The tax system has been devised by the rich for the rich. What taxes have been repealed and reduced since the war? Taxes on property, income, manufactures, transfers, inheritances, bank checks, and bank deposits—all taxes of the rich. What taxes have been reduced for the benefit of the poor?

Among the injustices and evils of the protective tariff are class legislation and that what it takes from the many it gives to the few. It robs many Peters to pay Paul what was never due. It leads to evil competition, to congestion, strikes, lockouts, monopoly, trusts, pools and combinations, and artificially ensnares capital and labor in a minimum of productive efforts and results.

We boast of striking the fetters off from 4,000,000 slaves, while this is the condition of 8,000,000 farmers and 4,000,000 mechanics and laborers. We talk about high wages, when half of those wages are confiscated to sordid avarice, an equivalent return is prohibited. It is time we stopped bragging about prosperity and took steps to secure to industry the crust it has earned.

Tax whiskey, not clothing; tax tobacco, but not sugar; tax imported silks, but not coal; imported wines and brandies, but not iron; tax the imported clothes, but not salt or lumber. Admit everything in this country free that enters into the manufacture of goods, so that we can compete with the world in manufactured products. This will give employment to workingmen whose products will find a market the world over.

A G. A. R. post having "censured" Mayor Hewett, the latter recalls his own loyalty to the government during the war. The war department, he said, had tendered their thanks to Cooper & Hewett for their services in turning over the Trenton iron works to the government. He also entered a European foundry disguised as an artizan, and learned the secret of manufacturing gun barrel iron, which he telegraphed to Washington.

Here is a little good sense from the Troy Press. Approval of the bill in toto and denunciation of the same are alike absurd. It has good points; it may have weak points. The subject to which it relates is of the utmost importance to all sections of the country. It refers to matters to be considered calmly and in coolness. The Democratic members of the committee that has charge of the bill have been inspired by the most patriotic motives. Whether it has arrived at a correct determination in all things need not now be claimed. It has endeavored to do right. Before we go further on that point let us see how the Republicans will act.

The County Option law was bullied and bored through the reluctant Legislature by a little scheming, tricky Detroit junta of self-constituted wise acres and bosses, with the Detroit Tribune for their organ, against the sound judgement of level-headed Republicans, and against the sound opinions of able lawyers. The Supreme Court has pronounced the act unconstitutional. For all the trouble and expense that act has brought upon the people of Michigan, for all the disappointment its failure causes to earnest temperance men, for all the reign of free whisky and lawlessness it has produced since the first of May, and for all the injury this failure may do to the Republican party, that junta and their organ are responsible.—Lansing Republican.

THE GREAT TARIFF DEBATE.

Saturday closed the most memorable tariff debate that Congress has heard during the last half century. Since the tariff conflicts of 1842 and 1846 there has been no really great discussion of the question until now, and exhaustive as were the tariff discussions of 1842 and 1846, they did not equal the late discussion in the House in the volume of speeches, and did not surpass it in either rhetorical or matter-of-fact elucidation of the great issue. There were many common place speeches delivered, of course, as is expected in political disputation in Congress, and there were many others which did not rise above threadbare appeals to partisan prejudices; but throughout the whole three weeks of debate there were gems of oratory and occasional exhibitions of the highest standard of statesmanship.

The tariff debate opened with Chairman Mills' defense of the revenue bill presented by the Ways and Means Committee, to which Judge Kelley, the father of the House and the great protection leader, replied. Both delivered carefully prepared speeches, and both were measurably disappointing—Chairman Mills because he spoke more intelligently and practically than was expected, and Judge Kelley because he simply repeated himself of twenty years ago without any attempt at special adaptation to the present. It is proper to say that there was not much expected of Chairman Mills, as he was regarded as rather a free trade theorist than a practical student of the tariff, and he acquitted himself with unexpected credit. On the other hand, much was expected of Judge Kelley, and he failed solely because the progress of nearly a quarter of a century of peace seems to have made no impression upon the venerable apostle of protection. In point of fact, the opening speeches of Chairman Mills and Judge Kelley were soon forgotten as practical and progressive men more incisively discussed the question in its vital bearing upon the present.

The three speeches of the great debate which will be most studied and remembered are those of Mr. Randall, Mr. Reed and Mr. Carlisle. Public interest naturally centers in these three men, not only because they represent three opposing phases of tariff theory, but also because of their overshadowing political prominence. Mr. Randall spoke for a remnant of the Democracy that adheres to high war tariff taxes in time of peace, and his antagonism to a democratic administration gave additional importance to his utterances. His speech, like Judge Kelley's, was a repetition of the arguments employed in the sore distress and exceptional exactions of war. Every theory he advances in support of the protection of industry is unanswerable, but he discussed only theories, omitting the vital point of the peculiar and pressing condition of the present, and thus failed in what should have been his great work—the critical analysis and searching exposure of the effects of the Mills measure. With the exception of a few and comparatively unimportant faults of the pending bill which he criticised, he could as well have closed his speech with a positive demand for its passage as with a protest against its approval.

The speech of Mr. Reed is specially interesting, because it comes from the confessed oratorical, strategical and tactical leader of the Republicans in Congress. He is very able in debate; fluent in speech; keen in preception; equally master of rhetoric and invectives; dauntless in courage and loves the tempest of partizan conflict. His speech will be the text book of his party on the tariff in the appeal to the country, and he presents the best possible defense that can be given for continuing the highest tariff taxes ever imposed by the nation in time of peace. To defend such taxes when they oppress the very industries they profess to protect, and extort scores of millions annually from our industries which are unneeded by the government and which invite jobbery and prodigacy, required a Reed's versatility and boldness to rescue his cause from obloquy, and Reed was well equipped for his task.

The most dispassionate and statesman like speech of the whole debate was that of Speaker Carlisle. He dealt in no rhetorical phases; he discarded platitudes; he impressed every hearer with the sincerity of his convictions and his earnest desire to promote the business interests of the country as paramount to party, and he reverenced the past only as it threw new light upon the present. He may be wrong, but, if wrong, he gives error in such tangible shape that truth can combat it, and he challenges dispute by the most pointed, practical presentation of facts and figures in support of his policy. If his facts and figures are wrong, his policy must be wrong also, but who has disputed or answered them, outside of generalities? His single illustration of New England's teaching on the tariff, as quoted in another column, goes to the very marrow of the tariff question, and there can be no cry of free trade hurled against him from New England in the face of the fact that he is obeying the teachings of Charles Sumner, Henry Wilson, Justin S. Morrill and the practically solid New England Senators and Congressmen in legislating for [illegible] the speeches delivered on the subject, that should be spread broadcast over the country, as it will be studied by the intelligent and thoughtful men of every political faith. The tariff discussion is now ended, and the country demands prompt action. Let the House pass a revenue bill, and pass it at an early day. It is vastly more important that some bill shall be passed than that any particular measure shall succeed, as the Senate will materially change any House bill and a committee of conference will finally frame the measure that is to become a law. Now act.

THE EMPEROR PAUL.

Curious Freaks of the Mighty Czar, Whose Subjects Had Good Cause To Be Afraid of Him.

This neat paragraph concerning the Emperor Paul of Russia appeared in the recently published Memoirs of Prince Adam Czartoryski.

"If a poor man, with an old round hat on his head, showed himself in the crowd which witnessed the parades, an aide-de-camp immediately pursued the culprit, who fled to avoid being bastinadoed at the first guard house. The chase was often continued in the streets, to the great amusement of the people, who hoped the unhappy man would succeed in making his escape.

"Lord Whitworth, the British Ambassador, was obliged to have a hat of peculiar shape made for him, so as to be able to walk about in the morning without contravening the Emperor's orders.

"Paul drove through the town daily in a sledge or an open carriage, accompanied by one of his aides-de-camp. When he met a carriage it stopped, the coachman and footmen had to take off their caps, and the persons in the carriage had to alight and make a profound bow to the Emperor, who observed whether it was sufficiently respectful.

"Sometimes women, with their children trembling with fright, were seen descending into the snow in a hard frost, or into the mud during a thaw, to accomplish this salutation. Paul always thought that people wished to slight him as they did when he was Grand Duke; he liked everywhere to meet with marks of fear and submission. When people went out into the streets in carriages or on foot, all took care to avoid meeting their imperial master; they fled at his approach and went down a side street or hid under a gateway."

Business Tact and Opportunity.

A streak of pure, good luck in business or the sudden achievement of success and wealth by a happy hit is rare, but there are many lucky and prosperous folks who are so because they watch their opportunities and make the best of them. Mr. Koehler, of Rochester, N. Y., tried his hand at canvassing for "Plain Home Talk" and made four dollars in the first two hours. Mr. Sand ord, of Maine, took forty-three orders from forty-seven persons to whom he showed the book. Mr Taylor, in Cleveland, took nineteen orders in one day. Why do smart capable men complain of hard times and "nothing to do" when equal opportunities are open to them? They have only to call for circulars, prospectus and terms of the Murary Hill Pub. Co., 129 East 28th St., New York.

Just a Trifle Too Shrewd.

The magnitude of the female mind (in rare instances we mean to take a comprehensive view of a business transaction is marvellous.

At a dry-goods store in this city a woman recently called for some sort of trimming, which we will not attempt to describe because we could not. She was told that the piece, containing ten yards, would cost her thirty cents.

Then a conversation something like the following ensued

Customer—"O, I don't want a whole piece. How much is it by the yard?"

Saleswoman—"We have to charge five cents a yard when we cut it."

C.—"Five cents? Well, I guess seven yards will be enough." (Here the stuff is measured.)

S.—"Thirty-five cents, please."

C.—"How much is there left?"

S.—"Three yards."

C. (presumably mentally reckoning that ten times five are fifty)—"How much for the whole ten yards?"

S. (demurely, but with an eye to business)—"O, you can have the ten yards for forty-five cents."

C.—"Very well, I guess I'll take ten yards." (Planks down forty-five cents and departs.)—Newburyport Herald.

Sponge Baths.

A fat-looking, bald headed, lobster-colored German in shirt-sleeves appeared in the hallway of a Chicago bathing establishment, addressing a loose-jointed individual with wet, stringy hair.

"Holt on von minud," called out the first described; "you can no go oud dese place so you not bay me fur dot bat."

"Pay for that bath?" exclaimed the other in apparent astonishment; "who said anything about payin'?"

"I say somedings 'bout dot."

"You do?"

"Yaw, I say you must bay me fur dot bat."

"You said it wouldn't cost nothing," said the wet-haired man.

"Noddings!" echoed the bath-keeper, "I no say such a dings!".

"What's that readin' on your sign, then?" inquired the disputant.

"Dot sign reats: 'Turkish bats, sulphur bats, vapor bats and sponge bats,'" replied the man of the lobster complexion.

"Well," said the other, as he edged away, "that last's it, bein's I didn't have any money, I took a sponge bath!"

The Teuton fell to studying his sign, while his patron meandered towards the City Hall, but when at last he looked up he had resolved to strike "sponge baths" off his list.

Savages expect to imbibe bravery by drinking the blood of their brave enemies. A more enlightened method of vitalizing the blood is by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla: it braces up the nerves and gives strength and fortitude to endure the trials of life.

Slight derangements of the stomach and bowels may often be corrected by taking only one of Ayer's Pills. Through not having the Pills at hand, your disorder increases, and a regular fit of sickness follows. "For the want of a nail the shoe was lost," etc.

See advertisement in another column.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect specific for women's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women in generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and many distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS. $22 to $900. The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.
Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the acknowledged excellence of their organs, the fact that at all the great World's Exhibitions, from that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably won the highest honors. Illustrated catalogue free.
PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but claim superiority. This they attribute somewhat to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer, by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and richness of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune, and other important advantages.
Catalogues, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians and tuners, sent together with descriptive catalogues to any applicant. Pianos and organs sold for cash or easy monthly payments also rented.

BABY IS KING.

A rose-curtained cradle, where nestled between
Soft cambric and flannel, lie pounds seventeen,
Is the throne of a tyrant whose praises I sing,
Of an autocrat awful—for baby is king!

Good solemn grandfather dares scarcely to sit [illegible] lest he bids creak;
Grandmother's a martyr in habits and can.

Father, stately and proud, hot home from the House,
Grows meek on the threshold, and moves like a mouse;
To stare at the bundle then outward he goes
Like an elephant trying to walk on his toes.

Mother, queen of the ball room, throws loyally down
Before him the hearts she wore in her crown.
And sings little soft songs of how she loves best
The fair baby blossom she rocks on her breast.

Good aunties and cousins before him bow low,
Though he rumples their fringes, twists collar and bow;
He bids the nurse walk with his majesty's self,
And cries when she steps like a merciless elf.

He flings right and left his saucy, fat feet,
And then the next morning expects to be kissed;
He demands all your watches to scatter about,
And meets a refusal with struggle and shout.

Then failing to conquer with passionate cry,
He quivers his lips, keeps a tear in his eye,
And so wins the battle, this wise little thing—
He knows the world over that baby is king!

THE BOYCOTTED LETTERS.

A Frantic Effort To Tell His Love without Using M or N.

"Laura, is your heart free?"

The young man who spoke these words sat on the extreme periphery of a cushioned chair in the elegant apartment and leaned forward in uncomfortable agitation. The handkerchief with which in the excess of his emotion he wiped his nose ever and anon trembled visibly, and his voice had that dreamy, touching intonation that marks a sensitive, high-souled man in the last stage of influenza and unrequited affection.

"Why, Mr. Hankinson," replied the lovely girl, with downcast eyes, but with a kind of don't-come-any-nearer expression on her face, "your question takes me by surprise, and I hardly——"

"Laura," burst forth the young man impetuously, as he glanced in a laboriously careless way at a small ivory tablet concealed in his left hand, "it is hardly possible for you to realize the difficulties that beset one who is placed in the crisis which at this hour I face. You would be disposed to laugh, perhaps, if I should tell you what a trifle clogs the free cry of a heart filled with devotion—with excess of love, yet which affection—which love will be heard, despite the barriers that adverse fate appears to have erected at this period. Hear the feeble yet eager cry of a heart, Laura, that——"

"Mr. Hankinson," interrupted the young lady, with a puzzled air, "you speak most singularly. What is the matter with you?"

The youth wiped his nose again with nervous haste, threw the ivory tablet frantically across the room, and once more began:

"The batter with be, Biss Laura, is a cold id by head—a beasly, horrid idiluedza. Id by igdoradce add idexperiedce I had fadcied I could tell you of my affectiod; that I could bake byself udderstood without usig ady words that could codvey to you ady idea of the real idfirbity udder which I ab sufferig. I shall deyer agaid," continued the youth, bitterly, "try to bake a codfessiod of love by boycottig the letters eb add ed. You sble, Biss Laura! You laugh! You bock at by bisery! Good evedig, Biss Kajodes!"

Waving his handkerchief wildly the unfortunate young man blew a blast that shook the house, grabbed his hat, rushed out into the chill night air and was followed all the way home by four Chicago detectives, who mistook him for the lamented Mr. Tascott.—Chicago Tribune.

INTELLIGENCE IN THE HORSE.

Its Value to the Owner—The Fate of an Equine Fool.

In selecting a family horse, the first requisite is intelligence. If the animal be intelligent he is pretty sure to be safe, whereas even a gentle horse who is stupid is always a source of possible danger. He may be so lazy and lifeless that the most timid woman would not fear to drive him, and yet if he lacks mind, he will be pretty sure to kick the carriage to pieces or run away whenever anything breaks.

On the other hand, it is almost impossible to scare a really intelligent horse. He may be disconcerted or alarmed, but he won't lose his head.

It is, however, astonishing how little interest in this all-important question of intellect the usual horse dealer takes. The reason probably is that he feels perfectly competent to manage any horse, no matter what the animal's character may be, and he regards him simply as a beast of burden, and not in the least as a companion or a friend.

An acquaintance of mine sent a very shrewd jockey to Kentucky for the purpose of selecting a saddle-horse. He brought back a handsome animal, thoroughly trained and perfectly satisfactory to his new owner. But anyone who had studied horse's eyes would have seen at a glance that the high-priced "saddler" was a fool, and so he turned out to be, for he was easily frightened, and he finally ran away, and had to be sold in disgrace.

WHAT LED TO FORTUNE.

Value of a Simple Device to the Man Who Saw Its Value.

There may be no such thing as luck, but there is a potential influence surrounding some people which inevitably brings them to wealth or celebrity, or both. As an instance, I can cite a personal experience in my early life while practicing law.

In the same city there lived a young man by the name of McGill, who was also a lawyer, but devoted his entire time to the claim department of the business.

One day, in my office, I was fastening a lot of legal documents together with the crude fasteners then in vogue, when McGill spoke up and said:

"I have an idea that I can produce a better fastener than that."

The next day he handed me a rough specimen of the present popular fastener which is shaped like a letter T. McGill offered me a quarter interest to get it patented, but I laughed at him. He persevered, secured his patent and to-day has an income of between $400,000 and $500,000 per year. He resides in Paris, France, and the last time I was abroad tendered me a banquet there.

It was his luck, or whatever it may be termed, to strike fortune through a simple device and my luck to refuse to share it with him.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Child's Pretty Conceit.

On a summer's morning our little Lillie was walking with her aunt and discovered a spider's web. She was delighted and exclaimed:

"Oh, see, here is a hammock for bugs!"—Christian Advocate.

THE MEDIÆVAL DEVIL.

Curious Superstitions about the Evil One—His Services as a Lady's Maid.

To gain his end there were no pains the devil would not take, no situation in which he would disdain to place himself.

He assumed the likeness of an elegant young man in order to lead astray a girl called Mariken, whom he not unnaturally induced to change her name to Emmeken any allusion to the Blessed Virgin being specially distasteful to him. Through her means he gained more than a thousand souls, but was at last robbed of his chief victim and accomplice through the efforts of her uncle, a holy priest, in spite of all his exertions, for he feared that on his return to hell he would be tormented for his partial ill success, like a Carthaginian general.

He clothed himself with the body of a beautiful princess of Constantinople, lately dead, in order to marry Baldwin, Count of Flanders, on account of the unrivaled opportunities for evil which this position would give him.

He acted for thirteen years as lady's maid to a Portugese woman named Lupa, but was robbed of his prey after all; for since, amid all her wickedness, she had not ceased to reverence St. Francis and his disciple St. Anthony, they brought her the habit of their order on her deathbed, and so saved her from the clutches of the fiend.

Yet, in spite of all this zeal and versatility, he cannot be acquitted of the grave fault of sometimes wasting his time. It could, for instance, serve no great purpose for the devils to leap about the refectory tables of St. Dominic's convent. And from the time which he devoted to teaching in the Black School he did not reap an unmixed benefit; for, though "the devil took the hindmost," this was sometimes the man's cloak or his shadow, and his more able pupils, such as Sœmundr the Learned, learned among other accomplishments, to exorcise and cheat their teacher.—National Review.

THE FISHERMAN'S DREAM.

An Experience with Which the Reader Will Have Ready Sympathy.

I wandered to the country, Tom; I sat beside the brook; I tried to catch the nimble trout with line and baited hook.

The banks were just as muddy and the currents just as slow as in the days I used to fish some twenty years ago.

No people now were with me, Tom; I squatted there alone and tried to yank out massive fish, where there, alas! were none.

Mosquitoes bit me just as hard and chanted just as low as when they used to bore their wells, some twenty years ago.

And while I tried to swipe them once, and break their dreary song, the bank rolled down into the creek and carried me along.

The water was as moist, my friend, the mud as deep below as when I rolled into the creek some twenty years ago.

The line got wound about my limbs, the hook stuck in my eye, the pole twirled round the same old way and hit me on the fly.

I reeled off curses quaintly then, and naught could stop their flow—I cursed as loudly and as long as twenty years ago.

And when I started through the woods to reach my humble home my eyes were filled with last year's leaves, my ears were full of foam.

A snake sat up and bit me, Tom, just as that snake, you know, that left its trade mark on my leg some twenty years ago.

And then I to the market went, as you, of course, will guess, and having captured ne'er a fish, I had to buy a mess.

And then those withered scrubs I bought, I to my wife did show, and told the same old fairy tale of twenty years ago.—Lincoln Journal.

FOR THE BABY.

The Amusing Mistake of a Professional Beggar.

One family, in a prosperous town, evidently had no intention of living by its own exertions. The children were sent from house to house to ask for articles, and the preamble of their petition usually was the statement that the baby was sick.

Sometimes the baby was sick, and needed an extra blanket; again his recovery depended on new milk or currant jelly.

One day, however, the children who thus supplied the baby's wants were going home from school, when they were taken by a longing for one of the luxuries of life. With them the desire was to beg; therefore they called boldly at the nearest house, one which had often contributed to their necessities.

"Well, Hattie, what is it to-day?" asked the maid-servant as she opened the door.

"Please, the baby—"

"Oh, yes, I know the baby's sick by this time, but what does he need?"

"Please, the baby's sick and wants a pickle!"

Bismarck's Opinion of Linguists.

Prince Bismarck maintained in a conversation that the acquirement of languages does not imply talent. He thought the ear rather than the mind was cultivated by a linguist.

A consul appointed to Berlin pestered his minister to present him to Bismarck. At length an interview was granted, and, throwing etiquette aside, the consul brought his son with him. Bismarck looked annoyed, but the consul boldly presented his heir, with the remark:

"A most remarkable young man, Your Highness—he speaks several languages."

"What a fine waiter the young fellow would make," said Bismarck, coldly, to the minister at his side.

Unrepealed Laws.

Among unrepealed acts of Parliament in England stand the following gems:

Persons tending to use witchcraft, by a law enacted under George II., are punishable by imprisonment. Those practising palmistry are to be treated as vagabonds and punished accordingly. By a law enacted in the time of Charles I. meetings of people outside their own parishes, on Sunday, for any sports or pastimes whatever, are prohibited under a fine of three shillings and three hours in the public stocks. Any person disbelieving the doctrines of the Established Church, and refusing to have his children baptized, or to partake of the communion, may, by a law of Queen Elizabeth, be committed to prison.

Nervine Worth Knowing.

It is stated that the worst toothache, or neuralgia coming from the teeth, may be speedily and delightfully ended by the application of a small bit of clean cotton saturated in a strong solution of ammonia to the defective tooth.

Sometimes the late sufferer is prompted to momentary nervous laughter by the application, but the pain has disappeared.

A PLANTATION PLOW SONG.

The Quaint Melody Sung by the Simon-Pure Southern Darkey.

The following is a crude photograph of a plowing scene on a Louisiana plantation. The names of the two mules in the team, Buck and Berry, are used in the song. The prose interpolations are rendered verbatim, and the mournful song reproduced as nearly as possible:

"Git along, Buck! Git along, Berry! Git along, Buck and Berry! Git along, Buck and Berry! Git along, Buck and

THE FESTIVAL OF NATIONS.

A NEW AND CHARMING ENTERTAINMENT

TECUMSEH W. C. T. U.

A Brilliant Show, Plenty of Good Music, A Beautiful Supply of Eatables, a Large Gathering, and a Liberal Financial Return.

The ladies of the Tecumseh W. C. T. U. have been conspiring together for some time past to get up some novel entertainment by which they might replenish their treasury. A "Festival of Nations" was finally chosen, and a committee was appointed to solicit the assistance of the various churches in town, and prepare a program. Mrs. M. E. Corey was chosen to superintend the work done by the churches and Mrs. A. P. Coddington to take charge of the W. C. T. U. It is needless to say that their work was skillfully and thoroughly done. America was allotted to the W. C. T. U.; Italy, the land of sunshine and music, to the Baptist church; the Episcopal church represented snow bound Russia; luxurious Spain was taken by the Methodist church, and the Presbyterians represented oriental Japan. A good working committee was appointed from each one of the four churches, and the combined committees took the matter in hand with a determination to eclipse all former entertainments of a special character that have been recently given in Tecumseh. Thursday and Friday were devoted to preparing the Opera House, fixing up the different booths, and getting a supply of refreshments in hand.

Although Friday was a rainy day, and the supply of damp moisture that evening was abundant, still that fact did not deter the crowd from attending. From five o'clock until after ten in the evening the floor was crowded with visitors, the refreshment tables were constantly cleared for new comers, and the galleries were well filled with sightseers most of the time. At eight o'clock in the evening, the Opera House presented a most animated scene.

America occupied the stage, which was set with fine upholstered chairs and settees. The scenery was elaborately trimmed with bunting and national flags, while the front of the platform was banked with potted plants and flowers. America's table was placed immediately in front of the platform.

Near the north east corner of the auditorium was located the Baptist booth, representing Italy. It was about ten feet square and was composed of lace curtains for the sides, and similar curtains looped back in front. The interior of the booth was trimmed with flowers, easels and pictures and small musical instruments. The floor was covered with fancy rugs. The characters were attired in light costumes to symbolize the land of sunshine, music and flowers. Below are the names of the characters at this booth:

Italian Housekeeper—Mrs. I. C. Wolcott.

Matron—Mrs. Jas. Heck.

Governess—Mrs. L. G. North.

Princess—Miss Grace Heck.

Troubadours—Etta Thorpe, Hattie Bates, Roby Hosmer.

The Muses—Albertine Brewer Agnes Woodward.

Flower Girls—Maggie Spafford, Gertrude Fisher, Elsly Guiwitz.

Italian Girls—Blanche Taylor, Helena Adams, Etta Coddington, Mary Adkins.

Little Slave Girls—Winnie DeWolf, Naomi North.

Italian Prince—Bert Baker.

Peasants—Roy DeWolf, Charley Temple.

Organ Grinder—Russell Adkins.

The Baptist refreshment table was located about midway down the room under the East gallery, where many a hungry guest got a good square meal during the evening.

The Russian booth was located at the South end of the hall between the doors leading to the aditorium. It was made with open sides and a gothic roof, covered with robes of different kinds, giving it a decided artistic appearance. The interior was furnished in harmony with cold weather. Ice cream and cold drinks were dispensed in this booth.

The characters represented here were assumed by the following persons.

Chairmen of the Com.—Mrs. C. M. Woodward and Mrs. J. W. Patterson.

Ladies of Nobility—Misses Elida James, Julia Snell, Grace Savage.

Peasant Girls—Mame Crowell, Edith Woodward, Minnie Pomeroy, Bertha Bryan.

Monjik—Will Spayde.

Ushers—Claude VanTyne, Percy Fitzsimmons, Fred Tiffany.

This booth attracted much attention and was most liberally patronized during the entire evening.

In the South West corner of the room was stationed the Spanish booth. This was made with festoons and curtains of gay colors, yellow and red predominating with a front of lace curtains. The interior was beautifully furnished with plaques, easels, pictures, and the floor was neatly carpeted with rugs.

The Methodist table was placed in front of this booth, where edibles in Spanish maids and peasant girls. The only criticism we can pass upon the management is the fact that "ye editor" was yanked away from the head of the table, just as he got ready to order his fourth cup of coffee. The characters represented here were well sustained and most of them were very richly attired.

Royal Family—Mrs. Fred Rosacrans, Mrs. I. S. Osborn, Mrs. S. W. Anderson, Misses Maggie Beamish and Eita Potter.

Maids of Honor—Misses Adah Potter, Hattie Whittier, Nellie Conklin and Stella Cleveland.

Peasant Girls—Lizzie Beamish, Nellie Reynolds, Nellie Lawrance, Jennie Heck, Ina Blood, Julia Wyrill.

The Japanese booth, managed by the Presbyterians was located near the Northwest corner of the hall. It was made of dark shades of upholstery and curtains and trimmed with plaques, Chinese lanterns, Japanese parasols, screens etc., In quaintness and oddity, it presented a most striking contrast to fairy Italy, luxurious Spain and ice bound Russia.

The characters assumed here were very attractive, and fitly personified the almond-eyed sons and daughters of the East, and were as follows:

Miss Mary Dingman, Miss Kate Anderson, Mrs. Hettie Brewer, Mrs. John Freeman, Mrs. C. A. Slayton, Misses Nannie Frazier, Sena Hosmer, Honna Heesen, Allie Gray, Ida Rector and Flora Roof; Messrs. Al. Heesen and Lelma Stuart. Also little Elmer Slayton and Floy Freeman.

In front of this booth was the Presbyterian table, where a bountiful repast was served during the entire evening.

Shortly after eight o'clock the audience was called to order and the following musical program was presented, which was well received and constituted a very good entertainment of itself.

Star Spangled Banner—By Liberty.

"Alice," cornet solo with piano accompaniment—Dr. Woodard and Miss Jennie Root.

Character Recitation, by request—Miss Mabel Hayden.

Song—Mrs. A. W. Mills.

Piccolo solo—Robe Hosmer.

Piano duet—Miss Ellen Fisher and Miss Benedict.

Of the four, which was the handsomest booth? Among all the beautifully attired young ladies, which one would carry off the prize? Well, all things considered, taking into view the nations symbolized, and the beauty talents and wit of the characters presented, we can frankly say that—"Hold on, quaker; restrain thyself; even editors are not infallible, and a bachelor's opinion on female beauty isn't worth a rush." Oh, hum; perhaps the safe plan is to obey the gentle warning of the spirit and let well enough alone.

REPEATED ON SATURDAY.

Before closing on Friday evening the ladies decided to repeat the exercises on Saturday evening. Saturday proved to be a beautiful day. About five o'clock the crowd began to assemble and the program was carried out substantially as on the previous evening. Not so many guests partook of supper as on Friday but there was a large crowd in attendance, and ice cream and cake were served until a late hour. Between the hours of eight and nine, a fine musical program was presented under the direction of Dr. Woodward.

Star Spangled Banner—By Liberty.

Cornet Solo, "Annie Laurie"—Dr. Woodward.

Italian Troubadors.

Song—Mrs. A. W. Mills.

Cornet solo, prayer song. "Now I lay me down to sleep"—Dr. Woodward.

Song, "Rock a bye baby'—Troubadors.

Although the expenses were somewhat heavy, the receipts were liberal and the net income to the W. C. T. U. treasury reached $113.79. It was certainly a nice exhibition, well planned, and effectively carried out. The W. C. T. U. can congratulate themselves upon their success and thank the community for their liberal assistance and patronage.

Card of Thanks

EDITOR HERALD:

Will you permit the members of the W. C. T. U. through the columns of your paper, to thank the many friends who so kindly responded to our call for aid in the Festival of Nations. We are indebted to them for time and money. Especially thanks are due to the church committees of the four church, to the ladies who so ably assisted, and to the gentlemen, we are indebted for the diversity of articles donated for decoration, and for assistance in building booths. We wish to thank the young ladies and gentlemen, who contributed so largely to the pleasures of the evening by representing the different nations in costumes, and those who assisted in the musical program.

LADIES OF THE W. C. T. U.

A MONSTER JUBILEE.

Cincinnati on the Fourth of July will inaugurate an event, its celebra- [illegible] of 100 days that appeals to the patriotism of every citizen of this great country. This enterprise is nothing more nor less than a monster Exposition held in honor of the 100th anniversary of the first settlement of the great Northwest Territory.

Her business men signed guarantee notes a year ago aggregating over a million dollars; colossal buildings have been constructed in which to exhibit the articles entered for display; eleven sovereign states are officially interested in its success; the government has signified its intentions to make a splendid exhibit; public sentiment is crystalized in its favor; and, in fact, everything is working harmoniously for the enterprise. which, without doubt, will be an unqualified success both artistically and financially. It has risen above and beyond a mere local affair, and such work will be done as will insure attendance and exhibits from all parts of the United States, and from many of the principal centers of the old world.

A board of commissioners, selected from three of the most important commercial bodies of Cincinnati, have been at work for over a year in perfecting the details incident to an enterprise of this kind, and their labors have been supplemented by a commission of five from each of the following states: Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Kansas.

By each of the above states separate displays will be made, thus placing the exposition on a national plane certain to attract the notice of the entire country.

DOES SPRAYING EFFECT THE CURCULIO?

We reply that the spray falling upon the fruit finds its way into the crescent shaped incision and is present when the egg is hatched and the larva begins to eat its way to the pit, which it invariably does, and its food is the insecticide, which satisfies its appetite for life, without damage to the fruit, which heals up from the bottom of the wound and ejects both insecticide and dead larvæ, leaving a mere speck apparent on the skin when the fruit is matured. Try the experiment and watch results. After several years' experience, the Messrs. Moody & Sons, of Lockport, N. Y., have found it quite impracticable to dispense with spraying under any circumstances, while as a result they have found it necessary to pick off from one-third to one-half of their plums in order to prevent the trees overbearing, and have marketed large crops of plums at renumerating prices each year, having about fifteen thousand plum trees in bearing.

A GREAT MUSICAL EVENT.

Perhaps the most unique as well as the most remarkable series of musical jubilees ever inaugurated in America, has been planned and is now being executed by Mr. P. S. Gilmore, the dashing and renowned conductor, who has originated and carried out the most stupendous musical undertakings the world has ever known. Mr. Gilmore and his great aggregation of musical talent are now creating a furore in their jubilee tours of the largest cities of the United States. On the occasion of the grand opening of Presque Isle Park, the beautiful summer resort in Lake Erie, six miles below Toledo, on June 9 and 10, Gilmore will give four of his great jubilees in the large, elegant amusement pavillion on the island. Two grand jubilees will be given each day, afternoon and evening. The great chorus of 150 voices is already in rehearsal for the event. The chorus will be supplemented in special numbers by an anvil brigade and a battery of six beautiful bronze field-pieces, manufactured solely for these jubilees, which will be placed at some distance from the festival building, and fired in exact time to the music by electric keys placed upon the stage, and connected with the cannon by wire.

Altogether this will form the most remarkable as well as most entertaining series of musical jubilees ever presented to the people of this country.

Low rate excursions will be given to Presque Isle park on these days by all railroads centering in Toledo.

THREE HOURS AT RIDGEWAY.

Business called us to Ridgeway one day last week; and we spent the time between trains circulating around the

We found the venerable Peter Sharp at the old corner store, carrying the same genial smile of welcome that has greeted us for so many years. He is one of the ancient land marks of Ridgeway and we hope that life and health may be spared to him for many years yet.

S. P. Smith is still on deck, and is gradually extending his business. His residence is now connected with the Ridgeway extension of the C. T. line, so he has no difficulty in keeping up with the times.

S. Helm has a good run of trade in his harness shop. He is very conveniently located with harness shop, millinery rooms and dwelling all under one roof.

Waring & Potter are flourishing. Mr. Waring was in Detroit on business that day. The junior partner, Jesse Potter, has the general management of the store however, as Mr. Waring is absent a good deal, and the fact that their trade is enjoying a steady growth shows that Jesse knows how to give his competitors Jesse in in the dry goods and grocery line.

Coryell & Williams seem to be doing well. They are making a specialty of tin and slate roofs and are working up a good trade in that direction.

J. D. Arner was stationed behind the postoffice window as usual. The office is in excellent hands now, and was never more efficiently managed.

D. Harrison & Son have a fine market on North street, and keeps the town well supplied with fresh meats of all kinds.

Will Clack stands behind the counter at Clark's old store and seems to be gathering in his share of the custom.

Dr. Loree was found at his old homestead. His time is well taken up between his medical practice and running his big prairie farm, but he can always stop a few moments to talk prohibition.

We didn't get left this time nor run a wheel off the axle.

THE NEW TAX LAW.

The overthrow of the local option law places Lenawee County under the provisions of the tax law enacted by the last legislature. We give a general summary of its provisions.

Before commencing business the dealer must execute and deliver to the County Treasurer a bond, the sufficiency of which shall be determined by the Common Council, of not less than $3,000 nor more than $6 000, with two sureties, who shall be male residents and freeholders of the city owning real estate in the city, worth above all indebtedness, etc., the amount of the bond. The sureties can not be engaged in any way in the business. If the Common Council decides that the principal is an unfit person to conduct the business they can refuse to accept and endorse the bond. This makes the test of the applicant's moral character grounds for absolutely prohibiting him from engaging in the business, as that approval is necessary before the County Treasurer can issue his receipt. No minor, unaccompanied by his parent or guardian, can be permitted to remain in a room where liquor is sold. It provides that they may open at 7 A. M and must close at 9 P. M., unless the Common Council, by ordinance, grants permission to open at 6 A. M. and close at 11 P. M.

Any person found in an intoxicated condition may be compelled to answer under oath where he procured the liquor.

There is the usual prohibition as to selling to minors, habitual drunkards, etc., that there was in the other law. Its provisions, if enforced, are strict enough to make it very uncomfortable for the dealers, as the law further provides that an infraction of its provisions will subject him to a fine of not more than $200, or imprisonment not more than ninety days, or both, and further, debars him from engaging in the business for one year from his conviction. Even if a dealer thought he could afford to pay the fine the last clause would make him hesitate about any violation.

It is not likely that all of our "soft drink" places will continue business under the tax law. The local option law reduced the number of saloons here from 7 to 5, the five continuing to sell "soft drinks." We have had no interview with the saloon keepers, but we expect to see the number reduced to three or four under the tax law. Let the Common Council place the penalty of the saloon bonds at $5000, and require the saloons to close exactly at 9 P. M. according to the terms of the law. If there be any virtue whatever in "regulation" a few months trial under these stringent provisions ought to demonstrate the fact.

A BIG OFFER.

The HERALD does not intend to be outdone in enterprise, even by the Detroit dailies. After much reflection and patient consideration we have decided to offer a prize to the person who shall guess the three hottest days, politically, in Lenawee County, between June 1st and election day, guaged by the political thermometer in the HERALD office. The prize will consist of a years subscription to the HERALD and a lithograph portrait of the man who shall be elected President next fall. The first person who makes the right guess or approximates nearest to it will be entitled to the prize, and all guesses must be handed in before July 1st., next. Send dates on a postal card in this form:

Monday, August 6.
Saturday, October 6.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAY 31, 1888

Mrs. E. A. Tribou went to Toledo Monday.

E. G. Cook went to Manchester Monday.

Harry Root was in Toledo the first of the week.

Joe VanNess is clerking in McClure's grocery store.

Al. Heesen is learning the jewelers' trade at Adamson Bros.

Truman McKinney, of Toledo, was in town this week.

Loren Van Antwerp, of Deerfield, came up to see the circus.

Fred Teachout came over from Adrian to see the elephant.

Chas. Welsinger and Chas. Benedict of Adrian, were in town Tuesday.

J. F. Freeman, of the Dundee public schools was in Tecumseh yesterday.

Mrs. L. J. Taylor has been quite sick for the past 2 weeks with malarial fever.

A small sized cyclone capered around the vicinity of Sand Lake Sunday evening.

H. E. Anderson, who is improving his farm at Devil's Lake, was home Monday.

Will F. Anderson went to Toledo yesterday, so look out for a new addition to his stock.

C. F. Field went to Detroit yesterday morning to take part in the annual gathering of the Michigan editors.

Onsted's solitary saloonist has furnished satisfactory bonds to the amount of $6000 and is again dispensing "pizen."

Earnest Coller went to Battle Creek last Friday where he will assist B. J. Coller in launching several steam yachts in that vicinity.

The Young Peoples' Society of the Presbyterian church will postpone their social this week. Notice will be given next week for their next meeting. H. S. WARING, Sec.

To our many friends and especially the neighbors who so kindly aided us in our sad bereavement we wish to return our sincere thanks.

MR. & MRS. WM. J. IDE.

C. J. Woolley, tuner for Whitney & Currier, of Toledo, will soon be in Tecumseh. Orders can be left at the Lilley House. Repairing of organs and pianos a specialty. Strictly first class work.

F. S. Herbert, an Adrian swain, is advertising in a Detroit paper for a young lady correspondent, blonde preferred. We would suggest a stuffed club the proper tonic for the young man.

Chas. Farr, late of the Mosher house, of Jonesville, is now clerk at the Lilley House, and the traveling public as well as our business men will find in him a gentlemanly and courteous one.

The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Ry. will sell tickets for the Republican National Convention at Chicago, June 19, and National Democratic Convention at St. Louis, June 5th, at one fare for the round trip.

D. W. Grandon, editor of the new prohibition paper to be started in this county soon, was in Tecumseh yesterday and made us a call. Mr. Grandon hails from West Virginia where he has been engaged in publishing a prohibition sheet.

At the last meeting of the base ball association a committee was appointed to solicit names for the enlargement of the same. Another meeting will be held Friday evening at W. W. Frazer's law office. A full attendance is desired.

Considerable of a crowd gathered on Chicago street last evening to listen to the Britton band. Mrs. O. B. DeWolf attempted to drive through, but the crowd didn't make way in time and a small boy named Fred Manley was knocked down and his left foot stepped on by the horse making it necessary to amputate two of his toes.

Frank Robbins' circus showed to fair audiences last Tuesday. His aggregation requires two rings and a stage to show off their varied attractions and they were enthusiastically received by the crowd. The riding, trapeze and juggling acts were all good, but what attracted the most attention was the performing of the herd of trained elephants, which surpassed anything ever seen in this village.

At the meeting of the executive committee of the Union picnic of Northern Lenawee at the HERALD office, May 5. It was the opinion of the majority of the committee that the time of holding the picnic be changed from June until after harvest or until in August. The committee adjourned to meet June 2 at the same place at 2 o'clock sharp, at which time they would like to have all the members of the clubs and others interested in the picnic meet with them and see what is best to do. Please remember the time 2 o'clock and every body come.

L. M. WALDRON, Sec.

Fred B. Wood went to Adrian this morning.

Anderson Bros. have a new and nobby delivery wagon.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Crosby and Mr. Sundey.

Mrs. Chas. Blanchard, of Chicago, is spending a few days at her father's Hon. John J. Adam's.

Al. Stevens is in town this week He is now working for the same Chicago firm with whom Harry Dunn is stopping.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Blackmar, of Cambridge, were in town last Friday, and attended the Festival of Nations in the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. P. B. Swick, of Kalamazoo, were in town last week shaking hands with their numerous friends who were much pleased to see them.

The Tecumseh city band will give a street concert this evening. It has been decided to give their concerts every Wednesday evening instead of Saturday.

Ed. Armstrong was in town two or three days this week. He is now running a freight on the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago Ry., and is located at Indianapolis.

S. C. Stacy went to Detroit Tuesday morning to attend the annual meeting of the State Press Association and will be gone until to-morrow. It is the first play spell he has taken in about a year..

In our notice of the opening at the Sand Lake House last week the date should have been Friday June 8th, instead of the 9th. Read the notice again and be wise enough to attend. You will have a good time.

Whitenack & Bordine have obtained the patent and right to manufacture Morley's animal catcher, and they propose to push the sale. The device is an excellent one, is cheap and it ought to meet with an extended trade.

On account of Free Methodist camp meeting at Devil's Lake, the C. J. & M. will sell tickets at rate of one fare for round trip, from June 5 to 14. Tickets good going only on day of sale, and good returning up to and including June 14.

We understand that our townsman D. T. Hall is a candidate for Register on the Republican county ticket. He would make an excellent official if elected and we believe he would make an excellent run in this section of the county.

The Cincinnati, Jackson & Mackinaw railroad will run its first excursion to Devil's Lake, Mich., from Van Wert and Toledo and all intermediate stations, on Sunday, June 3d, at the rate of 40 cents from Tecumseh. Train will leave Tecumseh at 10.02.

"I've seen 'em all," said a traveling man, fresh from our northern suburb to-day. "I've been from one ocean to the other, but in two respects they can't beat that little town of Tecumseh. You can get just as good pepper and salt there as ever I saw."—Adrian Times.

The new plate for our broken window arrived last Thursday. It was safely put in place by workmen from Temple & McClure's shop, without expense to us. We find that it pays to keep a plate glass front insured. The cost of the plate and putting it in will pay the insurance for about 8 years.

All our readers will be interested in the quaint and amusing way they will be told why 5-A Horse Sheets and 5-A Horse Blankets are the strongest made and why the owners of horses will save money and have better animals by using these goods. The most amusing illustrations are yet to come, so look out for them.

F. A. Dewey, of Cambridge, has attended every meeting of the State Pioneer Society for the past twelve years. He has also made an annual necrological repost for Lenawee County, each year for ten years past. The list for the year now closing is 162. He will attend the State Society at its next meeting June 12th and 13th.

The Union services last Sunday evening were somewhat dampened by the heavy shower just before service time. The G. A. R. boys and Co. C. marched to the church in a drenching rain. Water proofs and umbrellas were at a premium about that time. A fair congregation however assembled and listened to a fine discourse from Rev. F. Adkins.

F. A. Dewey has favored us with a copy of an ancient ball invitation which he has kept for many years. It was the second ball held in the County and the invitation was printed in Detroit, as there was no printing office west of Detroit at that time. It is what would now be called a poor quality of print paper and the composition is in ordinary newspaper type

Below i a verbatim copy thereof:

Laverne and Edgar Ide of Detroit were called home to attend the funeral of their grandmother last Tuesday.

Suckers were in abundance on the show grounds last Tuesday and were fleeced out of a large amount of money by three men working the "shell game."

Chas. Keysor expects to have his bath room in connection with his barber shop, ready for use next Saturday evening, and the unwashed public can now be cleansed.

The Cincinnati, Jackson & Mackinaw R. R will sell tickets to Cincinnati and return on June 9th, 10th and 11th. Good returning up to and including June 18th, at the rate of one cent per mile each way, on account of meeting of the Knights of Pythias. Let all desiring to attend notify the C. J. & M. ticket agent as early as possible.

T. C. M. SCHINDLER, Ass't. Gen'l Pass'r. Ag't.

The death of Mrs. Elizabeth Ide occurred at the residence of her son, Wm. Ide, in this village, Sunday, May 27, of bronchitis. The deceased was in her 71st year. She had been a resident of Manchester until about three weeks ago, when she came to this village to pass the remainder of her days with her son. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon and the remains were taken to Manchester for burial.

Considerable excitement has been caused among the residents of towns along the eastern division of the C. J. & M. railroad by the report that the portion of the road running through Onsted, Tecumseh and other points will be abandoned and connections made with Toledo hereafter, by a branch running from Addison to this city. Shippers along the line of the road claim to have received notice to deliver their freight before June 1. —Adrian Times.

Tecumseh people need not lay awake nights on account of the above report, as it is undoubtedly manufactured out of whole cloth.

The opening of the season at the Sand Lake House will occur this year on Friday, June 8th. Mr. Wells intends to make it a gala day, and he expects to entertain a large crowd. There will be two base ball games during the day. In the forenoon Evans Lake vs. Invincibles, to which admission will be free. In the afternoon the grounds will be leased to Clinton vs. Norvell. Row boats and sail boats to accommodate all. The festivities of the day will wind up with a grand ball in the evening.

The June Magazine of American History is remarkable for the variety and excellence of its contents. It completes the nineteenth volume of this invaluable publication. Its frontispiece is Robertson's exquisite miniature portrait of Sir Joshua Reynolds. The opening article, "The Conquest of the Mayas," is the third in Alice D. Le Piongeon's graphic historical sketches of Yucatan, and is illustrated from photographs made by the author while residing in that remote country. Then comes four papers that all classes of readers will enjoy, "Personal Recollections of William H. Seward," by Hon. Charles K. Tuckerman; "Incidents in the life of John Hancock" as related by his wife, from the diary of General William H. Sumner, and contributed by James W. Gerard. Subscription price, $5 00 a year. Published at 743 Broadway, N. Y.

The Directors of the Milan Driving Park Association will formally open their new grounds on Saturday, June 2, 1888, when they will offer the following premiums to be competed for:

Race No. 1—Three minute class, trotting—1st. premium, Cooling Suit, value $10; 2d premium, Blanket, value $5; 3d premium, Lap Robe, value $2.50.

Race No. 2—Farmers Race—open to horses that have never been driven for premiums. 1st premium, Cooling Blanket, value $8; 2d premium, Blanket, value $4; 3d premium, Whip, value $2

Entries must be made either in person or by letter to the Secretary before 12 o'clock of the day of the race. Races to be contested, mile heats, best two in three. If five or more horses compete in either trotter classes the management will add a fourth premium of the value of $1.50 in each class so competing. Races will be called promptly at 2 P. M. Admission 25 cents, vehicles Free.

The Mystic Goat of Macon Grange is not dead, but is doing good service carrying over those that are in search of light and knowledge, having just carried over safely a class of thirty and has again started out with another large class which is expected to arrive at the fourth station Saturday, June 2d, at 10 A. M. All members of Macon Grange are requested to be present at that time to greet the new members on their arrival. Arrangements are being made to celebrate Children's Day at Grange Hall the same day, commencing at 12 M. Picnic dinner at 1 P. M. All the children and their parents in the surrounding neighborhood are cordially invited to be present. Speakers are expected.

DECORATING THE GRAVES.

The weather yesterday was all that could be desired to make the exercises in the observance of memorial day a success in that respect. Although no made, the program presented was one that could not but meet the approval of all. The absence of the city band was the only draw back to the proceedings, but the Glee Club in a measure made up the deficiency, in the way of vocal music.

At about two o'clock the procession formed on Pearl St. headed by Marshal J. R. Hialey and aids, followed by Co. C, Beers Post, the officers of day in carriage, floral car and citizens in carriages. Taking the line of march described last week, they marched to monument square where the program was presented, in charge of the Pres. of the day, Rev. J. Phelps. After prayer by Rev. F. Adkins and singing by the Glee club, the Rev. T. G. Potter was introduced and delivered an excellent oration, of which we give a portion:

"It is 23 years since the storm and strife of the civil war was hushed forever in the tranquil silence of the return of peace. The participants in that desperate conflict, who survived the fierce tempests of shot and shell, which swept so many of our sons to death, returned to their precious homes wearing well earned honors. But many of their comrades now sleep soundly in their lonely beds, waiting to hear the last recall of the inspiring command to fall in. The friends of the survivors were almost delirious with excess of joy to think that husband or father or son had at last come home to stay. The friends of the dead were unconsolable because they wanted those whom they so tenderly loved and who returned to home no more. What a wonderful period of diversified emotion of joy and sorrow, of smiles and tears, of glad exclamations of irrepressible delight and affectionate embrace, and then the mournful wail of the orphan and the deep sad sigh and sob of that multitude of widows and mothers. Popular sentiment very soon demanded some provision for the universal and perpetual expression of the patriotism, valor of their soldiers who had secured immortal fame. Decoration day was instituted as a solemn, triumphal, universal acknowledgement in which all people might unite in honoring our gallant defenders, and we are escorted here to-day by our gallant State troops, and we can unite in loving commemoration of the sublime devotion manifested by our immortal, beloved and now sleeping champions o the great cause. As we are assembled here for this purpose let us now respectfully consider the nature and extent of our obligations to our union soldiers. The men who became soldiers were not actuated by a thirst for military glory they were men of peace rather than men of war, they were not soldiers from personal motives but from force of circumstances. When southern political leaders meant treason, then and not till then, those patriotic men rose and exclaimed—take care, take time for the reflection and mature deliberation. It was from the purest patriotism they became soldiers, they saw unscrupulous and determined traitors engaged in deliberately attempting to assassinate American liberty. That army was composed of representatives of all classes of our people—farmers, mechanics, merchants, clerks, railroad and professional men, and the rebellion was suppressed without the aid of foreign countries. The victory of this nation over the most terrible rebellion ever organized not only has made us present peace, but ensured future tranquility because the surge of that mighty conflict which raged all over that portion of the land in rebellion swept away forever the infamous cause of all the trouble—American Slavery."

At the conclusion of the exercises the procession was reformed and marched to the cemetery where the beautiful custom of decorating the graves of our soldier dead was observed.

BASE BALL.

Yesterday afternoon the lovers of the National game witnessed a close and exciting game on the C. J. & M. grounds between the Macon club and to the roughness of the ground, and the yelling of the crowd, many errors were made on both sides. One of the noticeable features of the game was the frequent changes of players and position, on account of which it is impossible to give a list of the players. The game was umpired in a pleasing and highly satisfactory manner by Prof. Huston, of Ridgeway. The following is the score by innings:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Tecumseh,	4	0	2	0	8	1	0	5	6	—26
Macon,	0	8	3	0	0	2	9	0	1	—23

Nine young men from this village (it wasn't a base ball nine) drove down to Raisin Valley Seminary Saturday afternoon to play a game of base ball with the Seminary club. We presume the game was played, but are not certain, as no definite report can be had from the Tecumseh boys. It leaked out however that the Valley side of the score showed 65 runs, while after a careful search among the errors on the other side 7 runs were discovered. The students made 41 scores in the last inning. It was undoubtedly a case of brains vs. luck, with the former ahead.

Tuesday morning a game was played between Phil Hendershot's "Browns" and Van Tyne's nine. The Brownies were done up to the tune of 17 to 34.

Fred Deuel's G. A. R. steamer will make trips on the Globe pond every afternoon and evening when the weather is pleasant. Private parties can charter the boat at any time.

A WITTY LAWYER.

Two Good Stories of a South Carolina Counsel.

I have heard, says the Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Record, two good stories of Pettigrew, of South Carolina, the great lawyer and humorist.

[illegible] straightest sect and a very hard-working officer. It came to be Maundy Thursday, and Pettigrew and the Episcopalians and Roman Catholics thought they would like an adjournment of court ever Good Friday. Pettigrew was selected to make the motion.

"Your Honor," he said, "I desire to move that the court adjourn over to-morrow."

"Why, should the court adjourn over to-morrow when the docket is so crowded?" asked the Judge.

"Because," said Pettigrew, "to-morrow is Good Friday and some of us would like to go to church."

"No," said the Judge, decidedly, after a moment's thought, "the court will sit to-morrow as usual."

"Very well, your Honor," replied Pettigrew, adding as he turned away: "I know there is a precedent, for Pontius Pilate held court on the first Good Friday."

The same judge was a great stickler for etiquette, and when one hot July day Pettigrew came into the court room in a black coat and yellow nankeen trousers, the Judge took him sternly to task, asking him whether he did not know that the rules of the court required its counsellors to appear in "black coat and trousers."

"Well, your Honor," said Pettigrew, innocently, "I submit that I am within the rule, for I have on a black coat and trousers."

"But they're not black trousers," insisted the Judge, "black coat and trousers means that both shall be black."

"Then," said Pettigrew, "I call your Honor's attention to the fact that the Sheriff of this court is in contempt of the rules, for they require him to attend upon its sessions in a cocked hat and sword, and while his hat seems to be cocked his sword certainly is not."

The Judge said no more about the trousers.

Not an Enthusiast, Exactly.

Young Oliver is a dry youth of eight or nine, whose face is as blank as a wall when he tells a story or delivers an opinion, but who is an exceedingly precocious chap for all that.

The other day he went to visit a rich relative out in one of the suburbs, and was taken to see the ponies, and the carriages, and the elegant grounds, and finally given a private view of some cherished wonderful rabbits which had been imported from somewhere, and which he was expected to admire very much.

He viewed everything, however, with his usual dreary impassiveness.

On his return home, Oliver was questioned concerning his visit, and asked, among other things:

"Did you see those wonderful rabbits?"

"Yes, ma."

"Well, what did they look like?"

"One of 'em didn't look like nothing, and the other looked just like him."

A Georgia Patriarch.

The other day Capt. Worthy and Judge Wilkins rode out to the farm of the former. While sitting in the buggy in front of the cabin of William Brown, a [illegible] negro patriarch, [illegible]

"There seems to be a good many children about here, William. Are they all yours?"

"Yes, sah. All mine, but dese ain't all."

"How many have you in all?"

"Ain't got out forty, sah. I had forty-seben, but I had bad luck somehow wid the children o' my last wife, and didn't raise but seben of em. De oder seben died."

"Ain't had but six, sah."

"Only six?"

"Yes, sah, dat's all."—Thomaston Times.

Worse and Worse.

One of the hardest things in the world is to condole with anybody in a misfortune or a bereavement. If it were not that the matter is generally serious, a great many funny stories could be printed about the condolences people offer to the bereaved.

But up at Sacramento some time ago, a hard-working Irishman fell out of a fourth-story window and broke his neck. His wife was, of course, in great distress. After the funeral a neighbor called to offer her sympathy and condolence.

"It was a very sad thing, indeed."

"Indeed it was. To die like that—to fall out of a fourth-story window."

"An' was it as bad as that?" asked the visitor. "Sure, an' I heard it was only a third-story window."—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Medicine That Cured Her.

"I had a young lady patient some time ago in the south end of the town who conceived the idea that she was very sick, and that there was nothing on earth would ever get her out of bed again," said one of our local physicians yesterday.

"I didn't think anything ailed her worse than this idea that possessed her, and it was in fact pulling her down fast. She was a beautiful girl with a full head of blonde hair, and I noticed that she always had it neatly braided and smoothed down like silk, and seemed to hold the braids in her hands with great affection.

"One day I diagnosed her case thoroughly, and told her I had come to the conclusion to have her hair cut short.

"She was out of bed and around the next day."—Virginia (Nev.) Enterprise.

Its One Good Feature.

They tell of a certain Massachusetts Governor who, as he wandered out of church one Sunday after a young man had preached, ventured the general remark:

"That was a good sermon."

His judgment was disputed.

"Well," said he, "the illustrations were good."

This was disputed.

Determined, however, to put in the saccharine element, he said:

"Well, anyhow he had a good text."—Buffalo Commercial Advertiser.

A Child's Poetic Thought.

Our wide-awake little boy, aged five years, wanted to know, during a thunderstorm, whether God was not angry "with the naughty people," and on being told yes, but that was not the reason of the storm, he exclaimed:

"Ah, I know! I guess it is the angels' horses running races on the dark clouds."

THE DANGER BEFORE US.

We have already alluded to the importance of housekeepers paying more attention to the kind of baking powder used in leavening their bread. This is a matter to which we cannot draw attention too often. [illegible] something which involves the most [illegible] body of mankind. Temperance [illegible] us—and there is ample foundation for the statement that there is disease, both moral and physical, in the intoxicating cup; and in the same way there is disease, slow perhaps, but certain, in the, time and room leavening agents employed in many of the homes on the continent. No punishment is too severe for those manufacturers who place these poisonous alum and lime baking powders before the public with the assurance that they are pure and wholesome articles. In the belief of the truth of such statements such baking powders are largely used in the preparation of food and in this way the poisonous ingredients are taken into the system without a suspicion of their presence. By and by come spells of headache, distress in the stomach, loss of appetite, a fluttering of the heart; the child is seized with an apparently causeless cough. The coating of the stomach is destroyed, perhaps one of the vital organs is rendered almost useless; the kidneys are attacked with Bright's disease. The health of the child is irreparably broken down; the adult becomes a chronic invalid. These are the doings of the modern cheap baking powders that are composed of lime and alum or that contain sulphuric or phosphate acids.

In view of these facts surely all housewives should exercise the care that is, we know, now exercised by some in the selection of a proper brand of baking powder. She who does not do so, whether the neglect is the result of ignorance or recklessness, cannot free herself from the responsibility for the health, perhaps life, thereby endangered. No housewife need be ignorant of the quality and composition of the article which sweetens to heaven her bread, biscuit and cake. The official reports of the government chemists, who are certainly unprejudiced, have been published and show very clearly the quality and strength of all the baking powders in the market. The Royal Baking Powder, which is accessible at every hand, is reported as entirely free from lime, alum, phosphatic acid, or any injurious ingredient. It is further stated by the most eminent authorities of food hygiene that food raised with it is more wholesome than when raised by any other method. It should therefore be commended to the careful of all but no other baking powder, when there are so many in the market, some of which will find their way into use, is free from all of these substances. The official analysis assures us, however, that all of the Royal contain either lime or alum. The housekeeper who regards the health of her loved ones should take no risk, order the Royal, and make personal examination to be sure that no other brand is sent her in its place.

The supervisors this spring, in addition to their usual assessments, are required to ascertain and report the names of every soldier living in their respective towns, with the company, regiment, battery or vessel in which they served. The act requiring this work at this time was passed at the last session of the legislature, numbered 296 and approved June 28, 1887.

Don't Experiment.

You cannot afford to waste time in experimenting when your lungs are in danger. Consumption always seems, at first only a cold. Do not permit any dealer to impose upon you with some cheap imitation of Dr King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, but be sure you get the genuine. Because he can make more profit he may tell you he has something just as good, or just the same. Don't be deceived, but insist upon getting Dr King's New Discovery, which is guaranteed to give relief in all Throat, Lung and Chest affections. Trial bottles free. Large bottles $1.

A prompt source of relief from every symptom of indigestion is found in Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic. This elegant and efficacious remedy is prompt and thorough in its action, acceptable to the taste and stomach, curing dyspepsia, jaundice, bad breath, piles, pimples, low spirits, headache, ague, malaria, scrofula, salt rheum, eczema, boils, tetter, rheumatism and all chronic diseases of the blood, stomach and liver. Fifty cents of Dr. Geo. Ferguson. Cures many who vainly seek relief of physicians.

GIRLS AND MOTHERS! READ THIS!

I wish to tell you of the case of a girl 16 years old, who had been sick with suppression two years. Her father had paid over $300 for doctor's bills, still she was failing. She had the worst countenance that I have ever seen, a kind of greenish yellow she was emaciated had constant bowel trouble, and had to take morphine every night in order to sleep at all. All who saw her thought she would die. Her parents said they had done all they could. I repeatedly urged them to try Zoa-Phora, but they were strongly prejudiced against "nostrums." Finally the mother said, "We must do something, and this is as likely to help her as anything." She and I persuaded the father to let the girl try it. As a result, in four months her functions were established and regular, and in six months she was the picture of health—a living wonder to all who had known her.

I could describe 20 other cases, not as wonderful as this, but still very remarkable cures.

MORTGAGE SALE.

BY a certain indenture of mortgage bearing date the 7th day of January, A. D., 1886, executed by Hiram Smith of Madison township county of Lenawee, and State of Michigan, to Frank N. Chamberlin of the same place and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Lenawee County, State of Michigan, on the 8th day of January, A.D., 1887, in Liber [illegible] of mortgages to said Chamberlin all that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the city of Adrian, [illegible] described as follows, to wit: Lot number thirty-three (33) and the west one-half of lot number thirty-four (34) on the plat of James Berry's subdivision of the Comstock homestead in the city of Adrian, as per the recorded plat thereof—excepting and reserving an alley eight (8) feet in width from off the west side of lot thirty-three (33) to be used in common with owner of premises next west of the premises herein conveyed for their mutual benefit and to be kept open so long as they or either may desire. Default has been made in the condition of said mortgage, whereby the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is now claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of Four Hundred and Thirty-Seven 32-100 dollars ($437.32) and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery have been instituted to collect the same or any part thereof. Notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgaged premises will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder on the 4th day of August, A. D., 1888 at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day at the east front door of the court house of said county in the city of Adrian, that being the place of holding the Circuit Court for said county of Lenawee, to satisfy the amount then due together with all legal costs and charges of this foreclosure.

Dated May 7, 1888.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, on the 11th day of October, 1882, Samuel W. Temple mortgaged to Addison Hardenburg, all that parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, in the county of Lenawee and State of Michigan, described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point in the east line of Pearl street ten (10) rods north of the [illegible] parallel with said line [illegible] rods eastwardly [illegible] North line of Shawnee street about ten [illegible] Depot Grounds about six (6) rods to lands of Herman Brothers and Kinger Factory; thence west on south line of said land of Herman Brothers and Noland two rods more or less to land conveyed by said Samuel W. Temple and wife, Hettie A. to Edwin Wood; thence south on east line of said land so aforesaid conveyed to said Wood two and one-half (2½) rods to the southeast corner thereof; thence west on south line of said parcel of land so as aforesaid conveyed to said Wood eight rods to the east line of Pearl street; thence south on east line of said Pearl street to place of beginning; with all the appurtenances thereto belonging or in anywise appertaining or thereupon situated, including the machinery and about the buildings thereof or to be hereafter erected on the same or any part thereof, to secure the payment of $25.00 in five years from the date thereof with interest to be paid annually at the rate of ten per cent. per annum for the first three years, and for the remaining two years interest to be paid annually at the rate of nine per cent. per annum, which mortgage was on the 14th day of October, 1882, duly recorded in office of Register of Deeds for said county of Lenawee in Liber 95 of mortgages on page 339 and 340. And whereas said mortgage contains a provision that in event any default shall be made in the payment of said interest, or any part thereof at the time therein specified, and shall remain in arrears for the space of sixty days the aforesaid principal sum with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of said mortgagee, his executors, administrators and assigns, become due and payable. And whereas default has been made in the payment of interest on said mortgage to the amount of $5.00-66-100 and upwards and the same having remained unpaid and in arrears for a space of more than sixty days, and the undersigned, administratrix, hereby elects to declare and does hereby declare the whole amount due, both principal and interest, amounting at the date of this notice to the sum of $280.82 100, and no proceedings having been commenced at law or in equity for the recovery of said sum or any part thereof. And whereas the undersigned administratrix has been compelled to pay the further sum of $98.37-100 for insurance premiums to protect her interest as such administratrix in the mortgaged premises.

Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and by virtue of the statutes of the State of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the moneys so due and owing on said mortgage, and the interest thereon from and after the date of this notice, and insurance premiums and interest thereon, as provided in said mortgage, and the cost and expense of this foreclosure, and the attorney fee provided by law, the said above described lands and premises will be sold at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of the court House in the city of Adrian in said county of Lenawee (that being the place where the circuit court for said county of Lenawee is holden) the lands and premises described in said mortgage, viz: All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, in the county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan, and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point of intersection of the north line of Shawnee street with the west line of the Jackson Branch of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad coming in said village, thence north at right angles with said Shawnee street, thirty-seven 37 feet; thence northerly on westerly line of said Railroad lands to the northeast corner of a parcel of land formerly owned by Alpheus Stearns, and more recently owned by S. W. Temple; thence west on south line of Railroad depot grounds twelve rods to land formerly owned by Emma Temple; thence south on east line of said land formerly owned by said Emma Temple, as aforesaid about ten rods to the north line of Shawnee street aforesaid; thence east on north line of Shawnee street aforesaid thirteen rods and fourteen and one-half feet to place of beginning.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON FOR JUNE 3d., 1888.

JESUS CRUCIFIED.—MATT. XXVII, 33 50.

NOTES.—"Golgotha"—The name probably comes from the singular likeness of some small elevation to a skull situated somewhere outside the walls of the city. Probably it is a hill northeast of the Damascus gate. This is at present covered with Moslem graves; and so it has been curiously preserved from desecration from monkish tradition.—"Wine to drink mingled with gall."—Mark xv, 23, has "wine mingled with myrrh." So this gall cannot mean any animal secretion, but it is some herb like wormwood, or some narcotic which may soothe the nerves of the sufferer and dull the pain.—"When he had tasted it, he would not drink."—By tasting he recognized the kindly intention, but in order that the full measure might be accomplished he preferred to die in the full possession of his senses.—"They parted his garments among them, casting lots"—Any garments or property of the victims were the perquisites of the executioners. The tallith was torn into four parts, while the cetonett, being one piece of woven texture, would have been useless torn, so they decided its possession by lot, casting dice into a helmet being the usual way.—"This is Jesus the King of the Jews."—All the Evangelists have slight variations as to the wording of this superscription. But this decisive title, an unconspicuous prophecy of Christ's drawing power, this crowning mockery, has to us the deep significance of truth. It is the mystery of unbelief guided by the hand of God.—"And the robbers also . . . cast upon him the same reproach."—Luke alone speaks of the penitence of one thief.—"Sixth hour."—12 M. This darkness was no eclipse of the sun, nor was it an atmospheric disturbance caused by an earthquake. It was another of the many signs and wonders to prove the sonship of Christ.—"Over all the land."—Meaning that immediate region of country.—"Took a sponge."—In response to the fifth cry, 'I thirst' John xix, 28.—"Let be."—The last mocking words from the heartless spectators.—"Yielded up his spirit."—Died probably of a literal broken heart. Blood and water flowed from the spear-wound. This can only be accounted for from the fact that on the rupture of his heart blood flowed into the pericardium, where it quickly seperated into what is commonly called blood and water. That he really died none can doubt. With that final cry he gave back to his Father's keeping the most infinitely precious spirit this world has ever held in man.

INSTRUCTION.—The royal sufferer had no notion of easing his condition by any artificial means. Had his Father sent numbness to his nerves he would have accepted this mittigation of pain gladly; but from man, he would receive no narcotic. He drank the whole cup bravely and loyally to the bitter dregs. This is a necessray lesson on endurance in these luxurious times. There are some Spartan virtues that people scoff at as being too "old fogy" and unnecessary. "If we can be comfortable, why not be so?" they say, and loll at their ease while the world is in travail and pain. Had not Christ endured, he had not conquered.

"And they crucified him." No wonder the sun hid its face from very shame, and the earth quaked from fear. The daily crucifixion of Jesus by wicked deeds and careless thoughts is no new topic to the teacher or scholar; yet the personal killing of Jesus in the heart of the sinner by the sinner himself is what must be impressed on each. We raise Christ when we love him and do his will; we mercilessly murder him when we turn our faces from him and disobey his wonderful commandment.

Church and denominational squabbles seem somewhat like parting the garments of Christ. The Church under the guidance of the Holy Spirit is his legacy to us. And here many are actually casting lots for the precious garments. Would that all the denominations in our land might join hands and hearts; cast their moneys into one treasury, and so present a united front against godliness and ignorance. When that time comes the land shall blossom with all the fruits of righteousness and peace.

God never forsook Christ. He tested him. He never forsakes us; and never is he nearer than when affliction or death stares us in the face.

The Lord was dead—now he lives. But his will be a broader, more far reaching life if each one takes him as a guest, a sole guide, into his struggling heart.

Died of Heart Disease.

Many eminent men, among them Mr. Vanderbilt, Mr. Hendricks, Gen. McClellan and Josh Billings died of heart disease last year. Authorities state that one person in four has it, though few know it. The symptoms are shortness of breath, pain or tenderness in side, palpitation, choked or smothered feeling in the chest, tendency to faint, swelling of feet, ankles, etc. If you have any of these symptoms do not fail to try Dr. Miles New Cure for the Heart. For sale at Baker & Hall's Drug Store.

GREATLY BELIEVED.

The Winter Resort Hotel Manager Makes an Error, but the Guest Fixes It.

There was only one palliating feature about it. He was a prosperous theatrical manager, and he was trying to put the public through the ordeal of listening to a bad performance simply because they had paid their good money. If a man pays for anything in advance he's bound to have it if it kills him. The fellow who has paid his board in advance has given hostages to the landlady, and he's bound to eat the board to the end of the month if it poisons him.

A theatrical manager who does not make money is about as insignificant, not to say despicable, a thing as can be imagined. The theatrical manager who has a plethoric bank account is an object of great respect and admiration.

However, it seems Los Angeles is perfectly aware that the sun is shining, and it is making its hay at a lively rate. It seems hotels there outdo the world. They say you have to pay for registering in some places, and that it costs so much to look at a room; but even at the biggest New York hotels they have something faint and dim of a conscience. But they have none in Los Angeles.

The theatrical manager went into the best hotel there, of course. He had a profound conviction that as the impressario who provided much of the fashionable entertainment he was entitled to consideration above his fellows. He got it.

The clerk, having been in a San Francisco hotel, knew him, and whispered something to the proprietor. The proprietor looked pleased, smiled and nodded, and the manager was shown to good rooms—that is, he says, for Los Angeles.

He had a good time. He was in Los Angeles altogether about thirty-six hours, and he went down cheerily to the office to pay his bill. He had in his hand all the money he had—$30. He "clunk" it in that debonair way theatrical managers have of clinking money when they've got any.

"How much shall I charge him?" said the clerk to the proprietor in an audible tone.

"He's got money," said the proprietor, and whispered something to the clerk. The clerk made out a bill and handed it to the theatrical manager who had been one night and day in the hotel. It was $26.50, with no extras to speak of.

The manager looked at the $30 and at the bill, and weak and limp he laid the money upon the counter. The clerk gave him back $3.50.

The manager gazed tenderly upon it and said:

"Will you do me the honor, sir, will you do me the high honor, sir, of taking a glass of wine with me?"

"Certainly, with pleasure," and they went to the bar. A small bottle disappeared between them, and the manager put $2 on the bar.

"Fifty cents more, please," and the demanded half was put down, and the manager still held the balance in his hand.

"I have still a dollar left. Will you take a cigar?"

"Delighted."

That left him half a dollar.

"Good-by, sir. This is the proudest moment of my life. You have honored me most highly. If you will take this half dollar—it is all I have left—I shall feel more comfortable. Thank you."—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Fellow Feeling.

You never hear of a hodcarrier going to a millionaire and complaining that he is tired because he has been carrying bricks all day. He would get no sympathy if he did. But see how differently a man in a humble position treats a man of position when he complains.

One of our best and most hard-working Judges went up to the bar of the club the other day to get a drink. He felt affable.

"Give me a long drink, John, I am very tired. I have so many things to carry in my head in court that it tires me out."

"I can sympathize with you, Judge," said the kindly barkeeper. "I know how it is' myself, carrying in my head all the drinks the boys order."—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Fleetest Bird of Passage.

There seems to be no doubt that the "frigate bird," an inhabitant of the tropical seas, is the swiftest bird that flies. It has been impossible to calculate its rate of flight within fixed limits. The pectoral muscles are immensely developed, and weigh nearly one-fourth as much as the whole body of the bird.

Another rapid flyer is the common "black swift." It has been computed that the great speed it attains is about 276 miles an hour, which, if maintained for about six hours, would carry the bird from its summer retreat in England to Central Africa.

Our American "canvas back duck" is commonly computed to be capable of flying 200 miles an hour.

Of the Church Militant.

When Mr. Forsyth advised the Europeans, during the mutiny in India, to leave the civil lines, a missionary came to him, and in a straightforward, simple way, said:

"I think I had better give up preaching, but I will not desert you, as I might be of some service, for I was raised in Kentucky and am skilled in the use of the rifle."

And he was of use for Mr. Forsyth, he and another, held the gateway over the jail full of prisoners until the threat of an attack disappeared.—Spectator.

He Caught On.

"I see," remarked the Duke of Toronto, looking over a New Jersey paper, "that Overdraft, the banker, is dead. He was your friend, was he not?" added the duke, kindly, seeing the tears gather in the American's eyes.

"Yes," said the exile, "he was. All that I have in this world I owe to that man. I was his cashier."

"Let's go and liquidate," said the duke, breaking the long silence.—Burdette.

His Hearing Was Defective.

"Did you go to church yesterday?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"Well, my hearing is so bad that there's no use in going. Can't understand what the preacher says."

"By the way, Quinby is going to give a great speech to-night. He'll roast the Administration brown."

"Is that so. I'll have to hear that."—Lincoln Journal.

"And this morning——"

"On the rack."—Boston Courier.

Successful Women's Enterprise.

The fact that women who can do one thing well find self-support possible is well illustrated by the success of a sandal company at Grand Rapids, Mich. This establishment is owned and controlled entirely by women.

It started operations a few years ago in a very small way, but from small beginnings it has grown to a business of large proportions. It imports its chamois skins direct from Italy, and the silk used in making them into sandals for children's wear is purchased directly from the manufacturers.

The institution gives employment to hundreds of needy women at remunerative prices, and refuses to allow machinery to be used. The last report shows a net profit on capital invested of over three hundred per cent.

He Called a Halt.

At a recent wedding in Boston, a young authoress who is still old enough to be married, in response to some playful taunt, turned to the little eight-year-old son of a friend standing near:

"Franz, dear," said the lady, "won't you marry me? Do say you'll have me and I'll write you a book every year."

To everybody's surprise the little fellow considered a moment, and then replied:

"There are plenty of other books to read, and there are too many men marrying women older than themselves nowadays."

The well-bred murmur of laughter that greeted this sally was shared by the merry young writer.—Boston Yankee Blade.

Premature.

Quigley took cold and died. Three months later the widow received a proposal of marriage.

"Gracious me!" she exclaimed in horror. "Get married! Why, my husband is hardly cold yet!"

"Excuse me, madam," said the suitor, politely; "I did not know that. I understood that it was cold that killed him."—Boston Courier.

Secular Literature "Rung In."

A small boy of our acquaintance is rather slow in committing prayers to memory, and requires a good deal of prompting. The other night he began his regular prayer in his regular way:

"Now—I—lay—me"—and there he stuck fast.

"Down"—said his mother prompting. Whereupon Johnny set off again with great alacrity and fluency—

"Down came a blackbird and nipped off her nose!"—Boston Transcript.

I think Ely's Cream Balm is the best remedy for catarrh I ever saw. I never took anything that relieved me so quickly, and I have not felt so well for a long time. I used to be troubled with severe headache two or three times a week, but since using the Balm have only had one and that was very light compared with other former ones. J. A. Acorn, Ag't U. P. R. R, Co. Eaton, Colo.

I find Ely's Cream Balm good for catarrh of long standing.—M. N. Nasley, 1934 West Chesnut St., Louisville, Ky.

The C., J. & M. R'y will run its first excursion to Devil's Lake, Mich., from VanWert and Toledo and all intermediate stations, on Sunday, June 3d, at rate of 50 cents from Britton. The train will leave Britton at 9:45 a. m., giving over five hours at one of the most delightful resorts in Michigan. Devil's Lake, with her commodious hotel accommodations, and ample facilities for boating and fishing, offers the greatest inducement to the sports man and pleasure seeker. See bills for further particulars.

A Horrible Inheritance.

The transmission of the fearful effects of contagious blood poison is the most horrible inheritance which any man can leave to his innocent posterity; but it can be certainly mitigated and in the majority of cases, prevented by the use of the antidote which Nature furnishes, and which is found in the remedy known all over the world as Swift's Specific—commonly called "S. S. S."

Mr. J. H. Brown, of Hornellsville, N. Y., writes: "Three years I suffered with this horrible disease. Swift's Specific cured me completely."

Prof. Edwin Faar, 224 E. 22nd st., N. Y., writes: "Swift's Specific cured me of a fearful case of Blood Poison."

Dr. B. F. Wingfield, of the Soldier's Home, Richmond, Va., writes: "Swift's Specific cured me of a severe case of Blood Poison."

D. W. K. Briggs, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "I was a perfect wreck from Blood Poison. Swift's Specific restored health and hope, and I am well to-day."

C. W. Laughlin, Savannah, Ga.: "I suffered long with Blood Poison. I tried Swift's Specific and am perfectly well."

A. W. Buell, of Power's Hotel, Rochester, N. Y., writes: "It is the best blood remedy on earth. I cured myself with it. I recommended it to a friend and it made him well."

Mr. F. L. Stanton, of the Smithville, Ga. News, writes that a friend was afflicted with a case of Blood Poison, and two bottles of S. S. S. effected a complete cure.

The Latest Tornado

The surprising manner in which the country is being swept by the great discovery of Dr. Miles for curing the many diseases that originate in the nerves is astonishing all who know the facts. His Restorative Nervine, a brain and nerve food, sold by Baker & Hall, cures weakness, want of sleep, the exhaustion, debility from overwork, care, worry and disappointment. It takes the place of stimulants, opiates, etc., and cures all nervous troubles. It contains no morphine, opium or dangerous drugs.

Some Foolish People

All wear tight shoes until it gets beyond the reach of medicine. They often say, Oh, it will wear away, but in most cases it wears them away. Could they be induced to try the successful medicine called Kemp's Balsam, which we sell on a positive guarantee to cure, they would immediately see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial size free, at Baker & Hall.

FIGHTING THE CODLING MOTH.

From the Prairie Farmer, May 28th, 1887.

In Bulletin No. 26 from the Michigan Agricultural College, Prof. A. J. Cook writes:

In Bulletin 14 issued a year ago, I urged as I have for several years, the value of the arsenites in fighting the codling moth. I only wish to add, at this time a few hints that I am sure will be of aid to any who contemplate making use of this excellent remedy. If all would practice it, millions of dollars would be saved to our people.

First—Use London purple or Paris green, and not white arsenic. London purple is cheap, mixes easily, and perhaps is a little less likely than Paris green to blight the foliage if used too freely.

Second—Apply early, just after the blossoms have fallen, when the apples are the size of small peas. If we wait longer than this some of the insects will have entered the apples and be beyond reach of harm, and so we shall partly fail of success.

Third—Use a dilute mixture, not more than one pound of London purple or Paris green to 150 gallons of water. If I were to make any change, it would be to make it more dilute rather than stronger. If kept stirred, it should always be white being sure we note that the liquid is evenly colored. This proves that poison is in every drop of water. I have proved repeatedly that the hardest trash of it is poison is safe death to the worst insects. So if it is not large enough in quantity, that is needless. Not that there is not poison enough on each apple, but that many apples have received no poison at all. If as dilute as recommended above we may scatter so thoroughly as to reach nearly every fruit, and yet not send off blight the foliage. It stands to reason that in using poison it is best to use the minimum quantity necessary to success.

Fourth—Apply the poison with great force. The apples are concealed and protected by many leaves, and to insure contact of the poisonous liquid with the calyx end of each apple, it must be dashed on to the tree with great energy; then it will scatter and every apple will receive the fatal atom and every larva be killed. The neglect of this caution is why some have only saved 75 per cent. of the fruit. I have frequently saved every apple, and that with only one application, but this was in time, and absolutely thorough. Lastly, be sure that the mineral is well mixed. This is the best done by grinding first in a little water and adding the full complement.

No one need fear to use this remedy. If the orchard is used for pasture, stock had better be kept out for a few days. The poison should never be handled with bare hands, nor should it be used when there is wind to blow the spray or dust on to the person using it. But most important of all be careful where the poison is left. No poison ought ever to be left unlabeled, and any poisons ought always to be put where they cannot possibly do any harm. Carelessness in handling is the cause of nearly if not all the accidents which result from such poisons.

WHAT IS IT AND WHAT IT IS.

Parilon (Clarke's extract of flax) Skin Cure, like many other inestimable benefits to mankind, was discovered by accident. The proprietor, engaged in the preparation of certain plants from time to time noticed the effect of working in the pulp vats on the skin. If there was present any cutaneous eruptions, warts, blemishes or scrofulous symptoms, all disappeared as if by magic. After experimenting ten years, it has become a scientific fact and a priceless boon to the human race. From giving away a few bottles the demand has increased until the sale for the past two years amounts to 1,032,000 bottles. Large bottles only $1.00.

C. A. Slayton has the agency for the McCormick light steel binder again, and has a sample set up, which he invites the farmers to examine. It has the simplest knot tyer of all binders, seven pieces doing the work of forty six.

Savages expect to imbibe bravery by drinking the blood of their brave enemies. A more enlightened method of vitalizing the blood is by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It braces up the nerves and gives strength and fortitude to endure the trials of life.

Prohibition
Of the LIQUOR TRAFFIC.
By Rev. S. M. VERNON, D.D.
The most active and aggressive period ever known in temperance work renders timely the appearance of this crisp, original and vigorous volume. It is a book quite out of the beaten track, newsy and piquant, bristling with telling points, brief, clear, sprightly, candid, earnest, convincing, fair, dispassionate, full of ringing facts and bright with sterling truths.
It popularizes the burning question of "Prohibition," brings it down to every mind and conscience, marshals its many startling facts in new and surprising forms, clarifies and invigorates its logic, paints in vivid and impressive hues the monster whose daily victims but increase its hunger, and the poison of whose breath blights whate'er it touches. Cloth $1.00. Paper 30 cts. Supplied by Agents, Booksellers and News Dealers, or mailed postpaid to any address by

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

The Methodist social will be held next Wednesday evening, June 13th, at the residence of S. Parker, on Washington street. All are invited.

Over 300 people assembled at the ball grounds Saturday afternoon to see the third game of a series of six between the home club and Ridgeway's, and for the first five innings they witnessed some of the rankest umpiring ever perpetrated on a ball ground by Geo. Arner. How our boys would accept him as umpire after the exhibition he gave in one of the games last season was a mystery to many. He is evidently one whose sympathies control him, for certainly if he knew anything about the the game and was disposed to be fair he never would have given such decisions. Our boys played very well until the 9th inning, when they went all to pieces and allowed Ridgeway to score 8 runs which left the score 13 to 1 in favor of Ridgeway.

Mont Hendershot, of the Britton Eagle, visited his parents Wednesday.

Alonzo Clark left Thursday noon for Hillsdale and other points.

A large number of people from this vicinity attended Moore's opening, at Wampler's Lake, Wednesday. Among the attractions were two games of base ball. In the forenoon Clinton vs. Evans Creek Club. Score 13 to 2 in favor of Clinton. In the afternoon, Clinton vs. Brooklyn. Score 14 to 3 in favor of Clinton. The steamer lately put on the lake started out once, got a ground and it took some time to get it back. Doc. Hyndman, of Norvell, and a friend went out in his sail boat. A squall struck and capsized them and others went and picked them up.

Doctor Blatchford has another heir—born Tuesday—a daughter.

Cora and Jennie Beckwith have been with their sister, Mrs. W. R. Bigham this week.

Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Stalker have been entertaining friends from Ypsilanti this week.

L. S. Smith, of Medina, New York, visited his neice, Mrs. Geo. McConnell this week.

Mrs. John B. McAdam and children are visiting her parents at Hudson.

Anna Becker was calling on friends Wednesday.

General Clinton B. Fisk who spent his boyhood here received the unanimous nomination for President on the Prohibition ticket at their late convention at Indianapolis. A gentleman was here Wednesday looking up incidents connected with his early history, probably for campaign purposes.

W. S. Kimball made a business trip to Troy Ohio, this week.

Wednesday noon Mrs. C. S. Burroughs and son Frank, left for Albion where she will visit her relatives for a week or more.

C. S. Burroughs is in Toledo for a couple of days on business.

Newcomb Brown of Jackson, was looking after his interests here Monday.

J. S. Kies visited Adrian Tuesday.

The Methodist Society are preparing to make extensive interior improvements at their church.

J. S. Kies went to Jackson Wednesday to attend the Diocesan Convention where he will represent St. John's church.

Edgar Halliday, of Napoleon, made his aged mother a visit the first of the week.

There was great excitement on the streets Tuesday for a few minutes caused by a runaway. It seems that as Miss Sarah, daughter of Jacob Raiser was driving up Main street her horse became freightened at a piece of paper in the street and started to run violently; turning north on Jackson street, the carriage was upset in front of John Martiny's shop, throwing Sarah out and pretty effectually demolishing the carriage. The horse freed from the buggy ran towards the pump in the street, scaling the entire railing by a single leap, falling to the ground where it was caught. Strange to say Miss Raiser was not hurt at all and save a few scratches the horse was uninjured. All in all it was a fortunate escape.

Elbert S. Tate has bought of Philander C. Frost, what is known as the Pykett farm. The papers were drawn Monday.

Mrs. Geo. W. Stevens, nee Sarah Bartlett, of Jonesville, is visiting her parents and friends here this week.

Heman Brown M. D., of Lyons, Ohio, gladdened the hearts of his parents by a visit the first of the week.

Barney Curry was in town Monday to all appearances as young as he was thirty years ago when he resided in this village, although he will be 80 years old the 17th of this month.

Oley Sinclair, Don Palmer, Joe Cummins, Will Muir and a number of others witnessed the game of ball at Manchester Tuesday, between the Milan and Manchester clubs. Score 7 to 6 in favor of Manchester.

P. S. Kimball and son, of Big Rapids, who formerly lived here, have been visiting their friends and relatives this week. Mr. K. is a brother-in-law to Geo. W. Goodrich and E. Y. Powell.

Miss Laura Clark returned Friday night from the visit to Claireview, bringing little Louise with her.

The social at Mrs. Slinger's Thursday evening, was very pleasant though not largely attended, as but few people knew of it. Someway it was not announced in the papers.

E. S. Tate, of Tecumseh, was in Clinton over Sunday.

John Fabrique, of Brooklyn, visited his parents over Sunday.

Shubal Green, of Lansing, visited old friends here a couple of days this week on his return from Philadelphia. Mr. Green was one of Clinton's pioneers having lived here over fifty years ago.

Doc Morden of Macon, was in town one day last week. It looked natural to see him on the streets.

John Sherlock looking as fleshy and good natured as ever, was here Thursday and Friday of last week.

Will Ward has been in Grand Rapids the past week.

A little daughter put in an appearance recently at John Hulet's. John came home Saturday to make her acquaintance and returned to Toledo Monday afternoon. John likes his position there very much.

Alonzo Clark returned home from Chicago the latter part of the week.

The Clinton Baptist Social will meet at Mr. J. Watson's next Tuesday afternoon, June 12th. All are cordially invited.

ONSTED ODDS.

Plenty of potato bugs in some gardens in this vicinity.

Oats are gaining very nicely since the rains.

There is quite a building boom in this vicinity this spring.

E. C. Halsted and wife, of East Rome, Sundayed with M. Aldrich's family.

Mrs. Julia Glenn entertained the missionary society on Thursday of last week, which turned out in large numbers.

Children's day services at Springville church next Sunday.

No meeting at the church here last Sunday, as the pastor attended the ydarly meeting.

G. C. Faling, of Jonesville, called on his grandparents, William Aldrich and wife, last week.

J. C. Taylor has put a new top on his fish wagon, which makes it more attractive, and he says he is bound to keep to the front in the business or sink.

Peter Maxwell and wife visited with friends in Wheatland last Saturday and Sunday.

The annual memorial services were held here. A good sized crowd congregated at the church at 2 o'clock, where prayer, singing, etc., and remarks by C. H. Dewey and others were listened to, also speaking and reading of pieces were indulged in and after about two hours of such exercises a procession was formed for the cemetery, where other exercises were gone through with, and then the graves of the departed soldiers were decorated. Eight misses were appointed to do the decorating. There being a soldier buried here of foreign birth his grave was doubly decora

The next session of Macon Grange takes place on Friday the 15th. At 2 o'clock P. M. in addition to the regular order of business the following is expected.

The Population of Tecumseh.

Is about 2,800 and we would say at least one half are troubled with some a section of the Throat and Lungs, as those complaints are, according to statistics, more numerous than others. We would advise all not to neglect the opportunity to call on us and get a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs. Price 50c and $1 00. Trial size free. Respectfully. Baker & Hall, Druggists.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

The late frost has hurt fruit some in this section.

There was a very large turnout at the decorating services held here.—Eaton G. A. R. Post from Britton was accompanied by a large crowd of the Britton citizens, and the exercises passed off very nicely. The band favored our citizens with some selections of very fine music as they returned from the cemetery.

Several of our citizens attended the decorating exercises in Tecumseh last week.

G. P. Waring and Richard Cadmus returned from the Prohibition National Convention at Indianapolis Friday evening, and report a grand time.

J. Y. Potter went to Adrian Monday on business.

Mr. Dunlap, general agent for the Triumph steel binder company, has been exhibiting one of their binders here for the past few days. Corvell & Williams have secured the agency to handle and sell the binder in this section the coming season.

Mrs. Sarah Rappleye and son Lawrence returned from their trip to Dakota on Monday morning. We are glad to hear that Mrs. Ellen Burch is improving slowly.

Rhoba Arner, while standing in the barn door at Mr. Cadmus' seeing them break stone with dynamite, was hit in the eye with a sliver of stone. Although the eye was hurt quite badly, nothing serious is anticipated.

Next Sunday being children's day, the morning services will consist of a discourse by the pastor for the children. In the evening the Sunday-school will present a program appropriate for the occasion. It is hoped there will be a good attendance.

Our base ball team expects to play the Petersburgh Grays on our diamond this week Saturday afternoon, if nothing prevents.

Mrs. John Arner spent several days with Tecumseh friends last week.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Jackson and son Clarence spent Sunday with relatives and friends here.

Lou Arner Sundayed with Ella Jackson, of Tecumseh.

Mrs. Henry McClure, of Tecumseh, and Mrs. Jacob Sedan, of Dundee, visited friends here Tuesday.

Mrs. Cora Kelley, of Tecumseh, called on friends in the village Monday

Misses Kate and RoeWolf, Mr. Clifton Geddes, Lucy Yingling of Adrian college, Sundayed here as the guests of Miss Belle Barlow.

Ada Linn visited relatives at Britton several days last week.

H. J. Williams and J. D. Arner are in Milan this week slating an elevator there. The slating business presents a very encouraging outlook for a lively business the coming season. With twenty years experience in the slate business and a fine quality of Vermont seagreen slate. Mr. W. can assure you a splendid roof.

Several from here attended the funeral services of Warren J. Holdridge in Raisin Sunday afternoon last. Mr. Holdridge was respected very highly here by all who knew him.

The funeral services of Willie Ransom were held at the church Sunday afternoon, and the attendance was large. He was sick but a few days with inflammation of the stomach, caused by eating ice. He had been in the employ of Wm. Clarkson for going on five years, and was a trusty, faithful hand, and steady with no bad habits. The bereaved family has the sympathy of all the community in its sad affliction.

Although our shoulders are not very broad, we are willing to bear all of our own faults, let the consequences be what they may, but we have no hump on our neck to father some one else's misdoings. The article that appeared in our letter last week in regard to the library board meeting, was given to us as it appeared by one of the board directors. The comments made upon it from the desk Sunday morning places the blame wholly on our shoulders, when in reality we are perfectly innocent, as we sent the article as given to us, and we send these few words as a brief explanation of our innocence.

Our base ball team went to Clinton Saturday of last week and had a game with the Clinton team. Quite a number went over to witness the contest, as it was the third game. The game as near as we learn was quite a lively one, with but little kicking from either team. The score resulted in a victory for Ridgeway, as follows:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Ridgeway	1	0	2	0	0	1	1	0	8	—13
Clinton	0	0	0	0	0	1	0	0	0	—1

Ridgeway battery, Huston and Palmer; Clinton battery, Codling and Booker. Time, two hours.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Lizzie Preston is now able to ride out and is on the road to recovery.

Leonard Begel, of Hanover, spent the latter part of last week and the fore part of this week with his son, Dr. Begel. Mr. B. is 82 years old, but is quite spry, and made the trip without any trouble.

A. D. Macham has struck a new enterprise which with him will probably spoil the trade for either the creamery or cheese factory. He has a young coon that he is raising by the aid of a cow. Al. has now got it down so fine that he doesn't have to milk for the coon, as he is able to milk for himself. As soon as Al. gets his coon cultivated he is going to have his hired men hunt coons, and thinks he can raise at least 100 of them without any inconvenience.

Not a great while ago some one broke some tile and stopped up a ditch for Fred Kopkie, and he now offers a reward of $5 for information that will lead to the conviction of the desperadoes.

We understand that one of our most promising young men had his robe and whip stolen while in the house waiting for his girl to get ready for a party at S. H. Palmer's one night last week. But we are happy to say he found them just as he was about ready to swear, thereby avoiding a stampede. We would respectfully advise this young man to take the robe and whip into the house with him in the future.

It is with the greatest regret and sorrow that we announce the death of one of our most esteemed citizens, W. J. Holdridge. He was sick only a short time, but was a great sufferer while his sickness lasted. He was a man of whom Raisin had great reason to be proud, and his death casts a gloom upon the entire community. His funeral was held at the Presbyterian church last Sunday, and was by far the most largely attended funeral ever held in this section. Mr. Holdridge was one of the directors in the Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Company, by whom his valuable services will be greatly missed. The family has the sympathy of the entire community.

Born, May 30, to Mrs. J. H. Loper, a daughter.

NORTH EAST FRANKLIN.

June seems to be taking things very coolly this year.

Rev. Orr Winton, of Addison, visited at Robert McCollum's last week.

Mr. and Mrs. McDermott, of Clinton, were at Lon Marshall's Sunday, interviewing the new grandson.

Mrs. Abram Hunt has been quite sick for a few days.

Gracie Spaulding has another attack of illness, but it is hoped it will not prove serious.

Mrs. Etta Fox, of Tecumseh, was at S. Spaulding's the first of the week.

Old Mrs. Hare is very ill.

Perry Allen is able to be out again.

Wm. Welch and wife, of Clinton, were calling on Franklin friends a few days ago.

There were quite hard frosts in this vicinity Saturday and Sunday, nights but not much harm appears to have been done.

School will close in the Excelsior district on Thursday of this week. There will be exercises in the evening consisting of dialogues, music, etc., and a good time is expected.

Excursion to Presque Isle Park, via C. J. & M.

The Cincinnati, Jackson & Mackinaw R. R. will run a low rate excursion to Presque Isle Park, through Toledo, on Sunday June 10th, the Grand Opening of Presque Isle Park by Gilmore's Band. Principal among the many attractions will be a game of base ball between the Toledo and Cantons For rate or departure of trains see bill or call on C. J. & M. Ticket Agent.

A. W. Slayton has twenty-three cars of lumber on side track in Detroit waiting to be unloaded and is shipping more all the time.

"My daughter was greatly troubled with Scrofula, and, at one time, it was feared she would lose her sight. Ayer's Sarsaparilla has completely restored her health, and her eyes are as well as ever, with not a trace of scrofula in her system."—G. King, Killingly, Conn.

I suffered from a very severe cold in my head for months and used everything recommended, but could get no relief. Was advised to use Ely's Cream Balm. It has worked like magic in its cure. I am free from my cold after using the Balm one week, and I believe it is the best remedy known. Feeling grateful for what it has done for me I send this testimonial.—Samuel J. THE COLD WATER TICKET.

"The Third Party" Convention held at Indianapolis last week was a large and enthusiastic gathering. In fact, the usual hubbub and hurrah, the wrangling in debate, the fight over the platform, the spread eagle oratory and the other concomitants of an American national convention were all injected in good proportion to enliven the proceedings. In attendance, in enthusiasm, in devotion to principle, it was fully equal to the old party conventions of thirty years ago. The friends of the movement liken it to the old anti-slavery party which sprang up in the forties, a small speck on the political horizon at first, but which gathered strength as the years went on and finally absorbed the old Whig party. No student of history can question the similarity of the two movements in many respects.

The ticket placed in nomination, is a clean, strong, able ticket. Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, the nominee for President, who formerly resided in Coldwater in this state, served through the war with much credit and owing to his interest in prohibition and educational matters has become a man of national reputation. Mr. Brooks of Kansas City, the nominee for Vice President has for many years been recognized as one of the leading prohibitionists of the west. The ticket cannot fail to give satisfaction to the rank and file of the party.

The platform adopted has the merit of boldness, conciseness and sincerity. The convention knew what it wanted and was not afraid to say so. The resolutions favoring absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic and opposing all forms of license, were made the corner stones of the structure. Had the convention stopped right there, it would have been been better for the ticket. One plank favors the abolition of the internal revenue system and another the reduction of import duties. One was adopted to satisfy protectionists and the other to conciliate free traders. But they are wholly inconsistent with each other. If the internal taxes were abolished, the tariff must stand, in order to raise the needed revenues. The civil service plank is a good one; so also are those to prohibit polygamy and combinations of capital. The woman suffrage plank is a logical sequence of the teachings of the party, but we doubt the political expediency of adopting such a manifesto at this time. Public sentiment has not yet been educated up to that point. Prohibition is the great issue of the prohibition party. On that issue alone it has gathered the voters it now holds. Prudence and sound policy demanded that the platform be free from other entangling issues. Men of the most antagonistic views on the tariff and suffrage questions, have joined the prohibition army, to do battle for prohibition, and it was not good politics to set these men by the ears or to alienate them. However, the platform as a whole is fully up to the average standard of modern politics.

A campaign fund of $25,000 was raised at the convention and it is evidently the design of the leaders to force the fighting along the entire line. This ticket will poll an increased vote next fall in nearly all the states, and in many states it will hold the balance of power. It will introduce an uncertain element into the contest and add to the intensity of the battle on all sides. The Prohibitionists are nothing, if not enthusiastic, and this year they touched the high water mark. The party has evidently reached the status of a national organization. The election this fall will decide its fate. Whether it will become a permanent factor in American politics remains to be seen.

THE PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

THE THIRD PARTY HOLD AN ENTHUSIASTIC GATHERING AT INDIANAPOLIS.

Fisk and Brooks Will be the Names Inscribed on Their Banner—A Good Ticket and One that Will Run.

The first party which is entitled to the name of a national party has held its convention and placed its ticket in the field. The convention assembled in Tomlinson Hall, on Wednesday, May 30th.

As the opening hour approached the delegates began to gather in Tomlinson Hall, the place of meeting, which had been neatly and tastefully decorated with bunting for the occasion. The only colors used were red, white and blue and interspersed among the festoons were many mottos appropriate to the object sought to be obtained by the believers in the third party movement. As the representatives of the various States filed in the forms of distinguished leaders were recognized and greeted with applause. The first occurrence to excite general applause and cheering was the entrance of the New Jersey Young Men's Prohibition League headed by one of their number bearing a golden crank of huge proportions. Cheer followed cheer in quick succession as the audience caught sight of the representatives of the State from which the head of the ticket hails. Each succeeding delegation was warmly greeted.

Chairman Dickie called the convention to order and Ex-Gov. St. John was elected permanent President.
